Key Findings

- Members of the U.S. House of Representatives so far reported a total of $9,535,672 in contributions during the 2015-2016 election cycle from the pharmaceutical / health products industry.¹
- The 310 representatives who signed either of two letters² opposing or critical of the proposed Medicare Part B demonstration project by the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services received a combined $7,236,806 in pharmaceutical / health products industry contributions for their 2016 campaigns, averaging $23,344 per representative.
- The 124 rank-and-file representatives (117 Democrats, seven Republicans) who did not sign either letter received a combined $1,585,857 in pharmaceutical / health products industry contributions for their 2016 campaigns, averaging $12,789 per representative.³
- On average, signers received 82% more in 2016 contributions from the pharmaceutical / health products industry than rank-and-file non-signers.
- The 244 representatives who signed the mostly Republican letter opposing the proposal received a combined $5,499,620 in pharmaceutical / health products industry contributions for their 2016 campaigns, averaging $22,539 per representative.
- The 66 Democratic representatives who signed the letter critical of the proposal received a combined $1,737,186 in pharmaceutical / health products industry contributions for their 2016 campaigns, averaging $26,321 per representative.

² The letter signed by 240 House Republicans and four House Democrats can be found here: <http://www.citizen.org/documents/240-rs-4-ds-may-2-2016-cms-demo-letter.pdf>; the letter signed by 66 House Democrats can be found here: <http://www.citizen.org/documents/66-ds-may-16-2016-cms-demo-letter.pdf>.

³ Because this analysis highlights lobby letter signers, it excludes congressional leadership (former House Speaker John Boehner, House Speaker Paul Ryan, Majority Leader Kevin McCarthy and Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi), who do not typically sign lobby letters. Congressional leaders also typically receive the largest industry campaign contributions. For contribution amounts to these and the full House of Representatives, see Appendix.

Background

The Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services (CMS) proposed on March 11 a Medicare Part B demonstration project intended to save costs to taxpayers and patients. According to the agency, Part B drug spending has doubled in recent years, from $11 billion in 2007 to $22 billion in 2015.⁴ Under current CMS reimbursement methods, a doctor who administers drugs in-office (such as for treatments for certain cancers, rheumatism or glaucoma) will be reimbursed the average price of a drug plus six percent. The proposed project would study the effect of modifying reimbursement methods in a manner intended to decrease physicians' incentive to administer the costliest treatments.

The Pharmaceutical Research and Manufacturers of America (PhRMA), the industry trade group that has in 2016 so far spent $5,982,500 on 122 lobbyists,⁵ opposes the proposal.⁶

On May 2, a letter opposing the demonstration project was signed by 244 members of Congress (240 Republican representatives and four Democratic representatives) and sent to Andy Slavitt, the acting administrator of CMS. The letter expresses “deep concerns” and urges CMS to withdraw the proposal. Public Citizen obtained a draft letter dated May 16 that is critical of the demonstration project and was signed by 66 different members of Congress, all Democrats. The letter expresses support for the proposal’s goals but raises “important questions that CMS should resolve before finalizing the parameters of the demonstration” and notes that the proposal has advanced with “no input from the Congress.”
