Tory minister Sajid Javid grants fracking rights after receiving funds from pro-fracking interests

Posted by Tom Pride in cynicism ≈ 18 Comments

Communities Secretary Sajid Javid has received donations from a pro-fracking US lobby group called the American Enterprise Institute:

The American Enterprise Institute has received more than $1,520,000 from leading fracking company Exxon Mobile:

> Casting Doubt on Global Warming
> The Guardian reported further that AEI "has received more than $1.6m from ExxonMobil, and more than 20 of its staff have worked as consultants to the Bush administration. Lee Raymond, a former head of ExxonMobil, is the vice-chairman of AEI's board of trustees," added The Guardian.
> Since the time of that report, AEI has continued to receive money from Exxon Mobil — a total of at least $1,520,000

Mr Javid has just granted the right for private companies to frack under people's homes in Lancashire – against the protests of more than 18,000 local residents:

No connection, obviously.

How can this be allowed to happen when The PM MAY stated that everything would be better for everyone under a Tory Government. Just as she promised Scotland would be better together. She also said that they would be a party for the people.

Well if we all turn up on mass on the day drilling is due to start then they can't go ahead. I don't mean a few hundred activists, I mean a mass turnout to show how the public feel about this. This is too important a decision to leave to the good folk of Lancashire and a few green supporters, we need to truly unite and get behind this appalling go ahead.

He obviously doesn't live in Lancashire, then!! And I hugely doubt whether fracking would be allowed anywhere near the home of a Tory MP!!

The American Enterprise Institute for Public Policy Research (AEI) is an influential right-wing think tank that advocates for lower taxes, fewer protections for consumers and the environment, and cuts to the social safety net.[1] AEI describes itself as "committed to expanding liberty, increasing individual opportunity, and strengthening free enterprise."[2]

In 2014 The Washington Post wrote that under CEO Arthur Brooks, AEI had emerged as "the dominant conservative think tank," becoming more influential than the Heritage Foundation.[1]

During the George W. Bush administration, AEI was regarded "as the intellectual command post of the neoconservative campaign for regime change in Iraq," Vanity Fair noted. [3]

AEI had approximately 225 staff and an annual budget of more than $50 million in 2015.[4]

Background

Mission Statement

The American Enterprise Institute describes itself as a "community of scholars and supporters committed to expanding liberty, increasing individual opportunity, and strengthening free enterprise."[2] AEI describes its purpose as "[serving] leaders and the public through research and education on the most important issues of the day."[5] AEI's research areas include economics, foreign and defense policy, politics and public opinion, education, health, energy and the environment, and society and culture.[6]

History

As of 2016, AEI claims that it was founded in 1938, and that it "arrived in Washington" DC in 1943 as the "American Enterprise Association."[7] Around that time, the AEA shared an address with the Transportation Association of America.[8]

Jane Mayer writes of AEI's early history in Dark Money,

> "In 1950, Congress investigated the group that became AEI, denouncing it as a "'big business' pressure organization" that should register as a lobbying shop and get barred from offering its donors tax deductions....The Internal Revenue Service nonetheless threatened the think tank's tax-exempt status. It was this searing experience that prompted AEI and other conservative groups of this period to avoid the appearance of being too partisan or of acting as corporate shills."[9]

The predecessor organization AEA had failed to register as a lobby, despite spending "considerable sums wining and dining members of congress," reported the Evening Independent in 1949.

Originally set up to speak for big business, the AEI came to major national prominence in the 1970s under the leadership of William Baroody, Sr.[10], during which time it grew from a group of twelve resident "thinkers" to a well-funded organization with 145 resident scholars, 80 adjunct scholars, and a large supporting staff. This period of growth was largely funded by the Howard Pew Freedom Trust.

Irving Kristol left the Congress for Cultural Freedom in the late 1960s to work at the AEI after the CIA's funding of CCF was widely revealed in the media following initial reports in Ramparts magazine. [11]

President Ronald Reagan said of AEI in 1988: "The American Enterprise Institute stands at the center of a revolution in ideas of which I, too, have been a part. AEI's remarkably distinguished body of work is testimony to the triumph of the think tank. For today the most important American scholarship comes out of our think tanks--and none has been more influential than the American Enterprise Institute."

In 1986, the Olin and Smith Richardson foundations withdrew their support from AEI because of substantive disagreement with certain of its policies, causing William Baroody, Jr. [12][13][14] to resign in the ensuing financial crisis. Following criticism by conservatives that AEI was too centrist, it moved its program further to the right and became more aggressive in pursuing its public policy goals.[15]

Intellectual Home of Bush-Era Neoconservatism

AEI was noted for providing the George W Bush administration with the hawkish officials and advisers who promoted the administration's "war on terror" policies, including John Bolton, Paul Wolfowitz, Richard Perle, and John Yoo.[16] The result was the "coalition of the willing" going to war with Iran; it also strongly promotes a right-wing "pro-Israel" position.[16]

The AEI's influence in the White House during the Bush presidency marked a high-point of its role in influencing public debate on American foreign policy and defense. In a 2007 speech,

> "I admire AEI a lot," Bush said. "After all, I have been consistently borrowing some of your best people. More than 20 AEI scholars have worked in my administration."[16]

Continued Support for Hawkish Foreign Policy

However it still actively promotes Middle Eastern military entanglements for both the US and its allies.[citation needed] In recent years it has advocated intervention in Syria's civil war, and it actively lobbied the Obama administration to take a hard line against Iran while retaining the military presence in Afghanistan.[citation needed] The AEI's "Institute for the Study of War" has recently suggested that the United States should send 25,000 ground troops to Iraq and Syria.[citation needed]

Ties to the Koch Brothers

David H. Koch is on the American Enterprise Institute's National Council, whose members "serve as ambassadors for AEI, providing AEI with advice, insight, and guidance as [it] looks to reach out to new friends across the country."[17]

Between 2002 and 2013, the American Enterprise Institute received a total of $867,289 in funding from the Charles G. Koch Foundation.[18]

Ties to DonorsTrust, a Koch Conduit

DonorsTrust is considered a "donor-advised fund," which means that it divides its funds into separate accounts for individual donors, who then recommend disbursements from the accounts to different non-profits. Funds like DonorsTrust are not uncommon in the non-profit sector, but they do cloak the identity of the original donors because the funds are typically distributed in the name of DonorsTrust rather than the original donors.[19] Very little was known about DonorsTrust until late 2012 and early 2013, when the Guardian and others published extensive reports on what Mother Jones called "the dark-money ATM of the conservative movement."[20][21]

DonorsTrust Funding

The American Enterprise Institute received $19,840,954 from DonorsTrust between 2002 and 2011. [22]

A report by the Center for Public Integrity exposes a number of DonorsTrust funders, many of which have ties to the Koch brothers. One of the most prominent funders is the Knowledge and Progress Fund, a Charles Koch-run organization and one of the group's largest known contributors, having donated at least $8 million since 2005. Other contributors known to have donated at least $1 million to DonorsTrust include the Richard and Helen DeVos Foundation, Donald & Paula Smith Family Foundation, Searle Freedom Trust, Lynde and Harry Bradley Foundation, and the John M. Olin Foundation.[23]

Since its inception in 1999, DonorsTrust has been used by conservative foundations and individuals to discretely funnel nearly $400 million to like-minded think tanks and media outlets.[23] According to the organization's tax documents, in 2011 DonorsTrust contributed a total of $86 million to right-wing organizations. Many recipients had ties to the State Policy Network (SPN), a wide collection of conservative state-based think tanks and media organizations that focus on shaping public policy and opinion.

In 2013, the Center for Media and Democracy released a special report on SPN. Those who received DonorsTrust funding included media outlets such as the Franklin Center and the Lucy Burns Institute, as well as think tanks such as SPN itself, the Heartland Institute, Illinois Policy Institute, Independence Institute, Mackinac Center for Public Policy, South Carolina Policy Council, American Legislative Exchange Council, Manhattan Institute for Policy Research, Oklahoma Council of Public Affairs, and the Cascade Policy Institute.[24]

About ALEC

ALEC is a corporate bill mill. It is not just a lobby or a front group; it is much more powerful than that. Through ALEC, corporations hand state legislators their wishlists to benefit their bottom line. Corporations fund almost all of ALEC's operations. They pay for a seat on ALEC task forces where corporate lobbyists and special interest reps vote with elected officials to approve “model” bills. Learn more at the Center for Media and Democracy's ALECexposed.org, and check out breaking news on our PRWatch.org site.

Ties to the American Legislative Exchange Council

In August 2011, AEI President Arthur C. Brooks spoke at a "Leadership Dinner" sponsored by Reynolds American Tobacco at the 38th Annual Meeting of the American Legislative Exchange Council (ALEC).[25]

Controversies and Claims

Astroturfing for Comcast in Opposing Net Neutrality

AEI is among the think tanks that have received funding from telecom giant Comcast , which has aimed contributions to make its lobbying more effective, according to The Washington Post:

> Contributions to think tanks are also part of the Washington strategy. They are intended to ensure that Comcast is "involved in the public policy discussions that affect the company," said Sena Fitzmaurice, a spokesperson for the cable giant.
> "Shoe leather lobbying gets you only so far," said Michael Meehan, president of VennSquared Communications, who helps companies manage their Washington messages. "Then it’s think tanks that write white papers, and white papers are taken by shoe-leather lobbyists into the congressional offices."
> Comcast "has worked with most of the major think tanks in town who are interested in communications issues," including the Aspen Institute, the Brookings Institution and the American Enterprise Institute, Fitzmaurice said, declining to provide further details.[26]

AEI and other Comcast-funded organizations wrote op-eds favoring Comcast's position on FCC rules governing Net neutrality,[27] which would have allowed broadband providers to charge services for priority access and speeds and which would not have classified broadband as a "common carrier" service regulated like a utility.[28]

Esquire reported,

> the American Enterprise Institute's Richard Bennett, wrote a story for leading tech website GigaOm in favor of the FCC's new Net neutrality rules. Bennett did not reveal the Institute's relationship with Comcast at any point within the piece...
> When reached by phone, Bennett said that he had been writing about Net neutrality for a decade before joining the American Enterprise Institute.
> "AEI's only had a tech policy center for maybe a year," he said. "I think you're trying to connect dots that aren't there.
> "The Institute has no official stance on the Net neutrality issue," he added.
> But the Institute's most read stories on Net neutrality clearly favor the FCC's new plan for a regulated Internet. One, titled "Time to give up the Net neutrality quest" was reprinted in the Wall Street Journal's Opinion section.

Another, titled "Net neutrality is a bad idea that's run its course," was reprinted on RealClearMarkets.com. Neither Bennett nor the publication discloses his employer's ties to Comcast in either piece, but both identify the American Enterprise Institute next to his byline.[27]

Minimum Wage Hikes "Simply Reckless"

AEI scholars caution against legislation raising the minimum wage “for the sake of low-wage workers,” claiming that mandating a higher wage increases the cost of employment and will therefore leave fewer jobs. In one article, AEI resident scholar Michael R. Strain called Seattle’s initiative to increase the city’s wage requirements “simply reckless.”[29]

Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform "Disastrously Wrong Response"

AEI has spoken out against the financial system regulations created under the Dodd-Frank Act . In an article, AEI scholar Peter J. Wallison claimed that the 2008 financial crisis, which led to the legislation, “was not caused by insufficient regulation, let alone by an inherently unstable financial system. It was caused by government housing policies…” Wallison wrote, “The Dodd-Frank Act was a disastrously wrong response,” claiming it created uncertainty and removed the incentive for financial institutions to take risk.[30]

Support for ALEC Voter ID Requirements

In 2008, AEI showed support for photo ID requirements for voting in elections, a "model bill" endorsed and promoted by the American Legislative Exchange Council (ALEC) in 2009. AEI resident scholar Norman J. Ornstein wrote, “I do not think, in principle, that requiring a photo ID is evil or onerous. An official photo ID can protect voters against charges that they are ineligible to vote” — as long as the ID is issued at no cost to the recipient.[31]

Casting Doubt on Global Warming

In February 2007, The Guardian (UK) reported that AEI was offering scientists and economists $10,000 each, "to undermine a major climate change report" from the United Nations Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC). AEI asked for "articles that emphasise the shortcomings" of the IPCC report, which "is widely regarded as the most comprehensive review yet of climate change science." AEI visiting scholar Kenneth Green made the $10,000 offer "to scientists in Britain, the US and elsewhere," in a letter describing the IPCC as "resistant to reasonable criticism and dissent."[32]

The Guardian reported further that AEI "has received more than $1.6m from ExxonMobil, and more than 20 of its staff have worked as consultants to the Bush administration. Lee Raymond , a former head of ExxonMobil, is the vice-chairman of AEI's board of trustees," added The Guardian.[32]

Since the time of that report, AEI has continued to receive money from Exxon Mobil — a total of at least $1,520,000.[33]

AEI and the head of its energy studies department, Benjamin Zycher, have faced criticism for distorting scientific findings on global warming from Jeffrey Sachs, a leading environmental studies scholar, Columbia University professor, economist, and UN advisor. Zycher had once criticized Sachs for misconstruing the IPCC conclusions on global warming; however, Sachs responded, "It is Zycher who distorts, misrepresents, or simply ignores the IPCC conclusions."[34]

Sachs went on to write:

"It is time for Zycher and, indeed, the American Enterprise Institute, to come clean. The AEI, despite its roster of distinguished academics, has failed to be constructive in the climate debate. It's time that the AEI puts forward a strategy to achieve the globally agreed objective of avoiding dangerous anthropogenic interference with the climate system."[34]

Support for "Regime Change" in Iraq

AEI emerged as one of the leading architects of the Bush administration's foreign policy. AEI has rented office space to the Project for the New American Century , one of the leading voices that pushed the Bush administration's plan for "regime change " through war in Iraq . AEI reps have also aggressively denied that the war has anything to do with oil.

Paul Wolfowitz , who was Secretary of Defense under former President George W. Bush from the beginning of his presidential term until June 2005, is a scholar at AEI (as of July 2014).[35] During his time in the Bush administration, Wolfowitz was a major architect of the United States' failed Iraq policy.[36]

Defending Big Tobacco

In 1980, AEI for the sum of $25,000 produced a study in support of the tobacco industry titled, Cost-Benefit Analysis of Regulation: Consumer Products. The study was designed to counteract "social cost" arguments against smoking by broadening the social cost issue to include other consumer products such as alcohol and saccharin. The social cost arguments against smoking hold that smoking burdens society with additional costs from on-the-job absenteeism, medical costs, cleaning costs and fires.[37] The report was part of the global tobacco industry's 1980s Social Costs/Social Values Project, carried out to refute emerging social cost arguments against smoking.

NGO Watch

In June 2003, AEI and another right-wing group, the Federalist Society for Law and Public Policy Studies, launched a new website NGOWatch.org /NGOwatch.org to expose the funding, operations and agendas of international NGOs , and particularly their alleged efforts to constrain U.S. freedom of action in international affairs and influence the behavior of corporations abroad.[38] AEI claimed that "The extraordinary growth of advocacy NGOs in liberal democracies has the potential to undermine the sovereignty of constitutional democracies, as well as the effectiveness of credible NGOs."[39] Ralph Nader responded, "What they are condemning, with vague, ironic regulatory nostrums proposed against dissenting citizen groups, is democracy itself." [40]

Personnel

AEI has more than 200 employees at their headquarters in Washington, D.C.[41] AEI also has adjunct scholars and fellows at research universities around the United States.[42] It also trains scholars from other parts of the world in how to run neopconservative think-tanks.

Board of Trustees

"AEI is governed by a Board of Trustees, composed of leading business and financial executives."[43]

As of July 2016, they were:

Connections

The following was compiled by RightWeb:[50]

- The Center for the Study of American Business and the Center for Strategic and International Studies are said to be spinoffs of the AEI (Saloma, 1984).
- The Business Roundtable : according to journalist Sidney Blumenthal, making contributions to AEI was a pitch made at almost every policy committee meeting of the Roundtable
- During the 80s, staff members were funded with the hawkish anticommunist group Committee on the Present Danger.
- Staff alumni Jeane Kirkpatrick and William Simon were vice president and chairman of the Nicaraguan Freedom Fund.
- Alumni Michael Novak and Irving Kristol co-founded the Coalition for a Democratic Majority
- Heritage Foundation
- Council for National Policy
- Center for Strategic and International Studies
- Center for Security Policy founded by Frank Gaffney with an alleged mission to "promote peace through American strength".
- Project for the New American Century , PNAC

Casting Doubt on Global Warming

The Guardian reported further that AEI "has received more than $1.6m from ExxonMobil, and more than 20 of its staff have worked as consultants to the Bush administration. Lee Raymond, a former head of ExxonMobil, is the vice-chairman of AEI's board of trustees," added The Guardian.

Since the time of that report, AEI has continued to receive money from Exxon Mobil — a total of at least $1,520,000
