Each template piece indicates the final size with a dotted line, and suggests a 1/4" seam allowance for folding the edges under. I'll be honest, I thought a 1/4" was too little when I was making mine, and ended up trimming my template pieces to the dotted line, then folding larger pieces of fabric over them at the iron, using plenty of steam. If you're planning to make your house out of felt, cut to the solid line to allow some margin for error with thicker fabrics.
