The Writers Store created the Hollywood Screenwriting Directory based on our experience serving the screenwriting community for over 35 years. From ambitious new companies to established studio execs, this specialized directory contains a range of people to contact regarding your script. It provides you with information about management companies who package production deals and independent financiers/distributors with a production wing. Each listing provides all the information you need, such as street and email addresses, whether the entity accepts unsolicited materials, and how they prefer to receive submissions. Access to this data is important, but even more crucial is that you understand the right way to use it. These companies are flooded with new submissions each day. If your work is formatted incorrectly or reveals that you're an amateur in any way, your submission will go straight to the trash.

To make the most of the Hollywood Screenwriting Directory and ensure that your script doesn't get thrown out on a technicality, we suggest that you utilize screenwriting software. This is the easiest and surest way to produce an Industry-standard screenplay. Programs like Final Draft and Movie Magic Screenwriter take care of the technicalities so that you can focus on the story, what sets your script apart from every other that comes across an insider's desk. Within the Hollywood Screenwriting Directory we also include a guide to proper screenplay format, including sample title and first pages to help you ensure that you're on the right track.

Knowing your audience is just as important as properly packaging your submission materials. If your script is an action thriller with a strong female lead, don't send it to Paul Giamatti's production company. Actors establish their own companies to find the roles that they really want to play, without having to rely on the studio system. Pad an actor's vanity (and his pipeline) by submitting materials catered specifically to him.

While many companies may not accept unsolicited submissions, that doesn't mean that they aren't interested in new ideas and fresh talent. Unsolicited submissions are potential liabilities. Scripts are property, so there are ramifications if they are not handled properly. If you decide to ignore the warning of "no unsolicited submissions," sending your script with a submission release will increase the chances of your script getting read. You can consult with an entertainment attorney to draft an appropriate form or consult a guide, like Clearance and Copyright by Michael C. Donaldson, which has templates for submission release forms. To make sure your work is protected, we recommend registering your screenplay with the WGA (Writers Guild of America, West) or the ProtectRite registration service.

The same companies that won't open unsolicited submissions may accept query letters via email. This is one of the many benefits that the digital age has provided for screenwriters. It is important to craft a dynamic, concise query letter that sells your script and you as a writer. The Hollywood Screenwriting Directory includes a sample query letter as well as guidelines on how to write an enticing letter of your own.

To get your script into premium shape before you submit it, we recommend that you take advantage of one of our top-rated ScriptXpert services. Our professional readers and coaches have the expertise to take your project to the next level, offering everything from Screenplay Coverage to Query Letter Critiques.

Though a creative town, Hollywood places great value on professionalism. That means that being courteous is not only polite, but essential for success. If you choose to follow up on a query or submission by phone, don't be demanding or frustrated. The people in these offices are overworked and don't owe you anything. Following up is fine, but only when it is done in a respectful manner. And if a buyer takes interest in your project and asks for a treatment, you must be ready to send it off at once! For this reason, we've included a guide to writing these vital selling tools in this volume.

It is easy to feel like the Entertainment Industry is a closed circuit, but in reality it is looking for new writers and fresh material. HOWEVER, and this is of vital importance, they are only looking for new writers who take the time to workshop their scripts, ensure that they are on a marketable level, and compose all the selling tools that the industry utilizes. The Writers Store is here to help you every step of the way with our slate of screenwriting courses, personalized coaching and Development Notes service, which mirrors the same process occurring in the studio ranks.

Hollywood is one of the most competitive industries, with thousands of ambitious individuals trying to break in. Dreams can happen, they can and do. And by keeping to these professional guidelines and honing your craft daily, you can get closer to making your dreams a reality.

Wishing you the best of luck,

Jesse Douma

What is a Screenplay?

In the most basic terms, a screenplay is a 90-120 page document written in Courier 12pt font on 8.5" x 11" bright white three-hole punched paper. Wondering why Courier font is used? It's a timing issue. One formatted script page in Courier font equals roughly one minute of screen time. That's why the average page count of a screenplay should come in between 90 and 120 pages. Comedies tend to be on the shorter side (90 pages, or 1 ½ hours) while Dramas run longer (120 pages, or 2 hours).

A screenplay can be an original piece, or based on a true story or previously written piece, like a novel, stage play or newspaper article. At its heart, a screenplay is a blueprint for the film it will one day become. Professionals on the set including the producer, director, set designer and actors all translate the screenwriter's vision using their individual talents. Since the creation of a film is ultimately a collaborative art, the screenwriter must be aware of each person's role and as such, the script should reflect the writer's knowledge.

For example, it's crucial to remember that film is primarily a visual medium. As a screenwriter, you must show what's happening in a story, rather than tell. A 2-page inner monologue may work well for a novel, but is the kiss of death in a script. The very nature of screenwriting is based on how to show a story on a screen, and pivotal moments can be conveyed through something as simple as a look on an actor's face. Let's take a look at what a screenplay's structure looks like.

The First Page of a Screenplay

Screenwriting software makes producing an Industry-standard script simple and straightforward. While screenplay formatting software such as Final Draft, Movie Magic Screenwriter, Movie Outline and Montage frees you from having to learn the nitty-gritty of margins and indents, it's good to have a grasp of the general spacing standards.

Screenplay Elements

Following is a list of items that make up the screenplay format, along with indenting information. Again, screenplay software will automatically format all these elements, but a screenwriter must have a working knowledge of the definitions to know when to use each one.

Ⓐ Fade In

The very first item on the first page should be the words `FADE IN:`.

Ⓒ Mores and Continueds

Use mores and continueds between pages to indicate the same character is still speaking.

Ⓓ Scene Heading

A scene heading is a one-line description of the location and time of day of a scene, also known as a "slugline." It should always be in CAPS. Example: `EXT. WRITERS STORE – DAY` reveals that the action takes place outside The Writers Store during the daytime.

When a new scene heading is not necessary, but some distinction needs to be made in the action, you can use a subheader. But be sure to use these sparingly, as a script full of subheaders is generally frowned upon. A good example is when there are a series of quick cuts between two locations, you would use the term `INTERCUT` and the scene locations.

The narrative description of the events of a scene, written in the present tense. Also less commonly known as direction, visual exposition, blackstuff, description or scene direction. Remember—only things that can be seen and heard should be included in the action.

G When a character is introduced, his name should be capitalized within the action. For example: The door opens and in walks `LIAM`, a thirty-something hipster with attitude to spare.

H A character's name is `CAPPED` and always listed above his lines of dialogue. Minor characters may be listed without names, for example `TAXI DRIVER` or `CUSTOMER`.

I Dialogue

Lines of speech for each character. Dialogue format is used anytime a character is heard speaking, even for off-screen and voice-overs.

J Parenthetical

A parenthetical is direction for the character, that is either attitude or action-oriented. Parentheticals are used very rarely, and only if absolutely necessary. Why? First, if you need to use a parenthetical to convey what's going on with your dialogue, then it probably needs a good re-write. Second, it's the director's job to instruct an actor, and everyone knows not to encroach on the director's turf!

K Extension

Placed after the character's name, in parentheses

An abbreviated technical note placed after the character's name to indicate how the voice will be heard onscreen, for example, if the character is speaking as a voice-over, it would appear as `LIAM (V.O.)`.

L Intercut

Intercuts are instructions for a series of quick cuts between two scene locations.

M Transition

Transitions are film editing instructions, and generally only appear in a shooting script. Transition verbiage includes:

DISSOLVE TO:
SMASH CUT:
QUICK CUT:
FADE TO:

As a spec script writer, you should avoid using a transition unless there is no other way to indicate a story element. For example, you might need to use `DISSOLVE TO:` to indicate that a large amount of time has passed.

Shot

A shot tells the reader the focal point within a scene has changed. Like a transition, there's rarely a time when a spec screenwriter should insert shot directions. Examples of Shots:

EXTREME CLOSE UP --
LIAM'S POV --

Spec Script vs. Shooting Script

A “spec script” literally means that you are writing a screenplay on speculation. That is, no one is paying you to write the script. You are penning it in hopes of selling the script to a buyer. Spec scripts should stick stringently to established screenwriting rules. Once a script is purchased, it becomes a shooting script, also called a production script. This is a version of the screenplay created for film production. It will include technical instructions, like film editing notes, shots, cuts and the like. All the scenes are numbered, and revisions are marked with a color-coded system. This is done so that the production assistants and director can then arrange the order in which the scenes will be shot for the most efficient use of stage, cast, and location resources.

A spec script should never contain the elements of shooting script. The biggest mistake any new screenwriter can make is to submit a script full of production language, including camera angles and editing transitions.

It can be very difficult to resist putting this type of language in your script. After all, it’s your story and you see it in a very specific way. However, facts are facts. If you want to direct your script, then try to go the independent filmmaker route. But if you want to sell your script, then stick to the accepted spec screenplay format.

Script Presentaction and Binding

Just like the format of a script, there are very specific rules for binding and presenting your script. The first page is the title page, which should also be written in Courier 12pt font. No graphics, no fancy pictures, only the title of your script, with “written by” and your name in the center of the page. In the lower left-hand or right-hand corner, enter your contact information.

In the lower left-hand or right-hand corner you can put Registered, WGA or a copyright notification, though this is generally not a requirement.

Query Letters

A query is a one-page, single-spaced letter that quickly tells who you are, what the work is, and why the work is appropriate for the market in question. Just as queries are used as the first means of contact for pitching magazine articles and novels, they work just the same for scripts.

A well-written query is broken down into three parts.

Part I: Your Reason for Contacting/Script Details

Before even looking at the few sentences describing your story, a producer wants to see two other things:

1. What is it? State the title, genre, and whether it's a full-length script or a shorter one.
2. Why are you contacting this market/person in particular? There are thousands of individuals who receive scripts. Why have you chosen this person to review the material? Is it because you met them in person and they requested to see your work? Have they represented writers similar to yourself? Did you read that they were actively looking for zombie comedies? Spelling out your reason upfront shows that you've done your research, and that you're a professional.

Part II: The Elevator Pitch

If you wrote the first paragraph correctly, you've got their attention, so pitch away. Explain what your story is in about 3-6 sentences. The point here is to intrigue and pique only. Don't get into nitty-gritty details of any kind. Hesitate using a whole lot of character names or backstory. Don't say how it ends or who dies during the climax or that the hero's father betrays him in Act II. Introduce us to the main character and his situation, then get to the key part of the pitch: the conflict.

Try to include tidbits here and there that make your story unique. If it's about a cop nearing retirement, that's nothing new. But if the story is about a retiring cop considering a sex change operation in his bid to completely start over, while the police union is threatening to take away his pension should he do this, then you've got something different that readers may want to see.

B Dear Mr./Ms (Last Name):

C My name is John Q. Writer and we crossed paths at the Screenwriters World Conference in Los Angeles in October 2012. After hearing the pitch for my feature-length thriller, October Surprise, you requested that I submit a query, synopsis and the first 10 pages of the script. All requested materials are enclosed. This is an exclusive submission, as you requested.

D U.S. Senator Michael Hargrove is breaking ranks with his own political party to endorse another candidate for President of the United States. At the National Convention, he's treated like a rock star V.I.P. -- that is, until, he's abducted by a fringe political group and given a grim ultimatum: Use your speech on live TV to sabotage and derail the presidential campaign you're now supporting, or your family back home will not live though the night.

E The script was co-written with my scriptwriting partner, Joe Aloysius. I am a produced playwright and award-winning journalist. Thank you for considering October Surprise. I will be happy to sign any release forms that you request. May I send the rest of the screenplay?

Best,
John Q. Writer

Part III: The Wrap Up

Your pitch is complete. The last paragraph is where you get to talk about yourself and your accomplishments. If the script has won any awards or been a finalist in a prominent competition, this is the place to say so. Mention your writing credentials and experience. Obviously, any paid screenwriting experience is most valuable, but feel free to include other tidbits such as if you're a magazine freelancer or a published novelist.

Sometimes, there won't be much to say at the end of a query letter because the writer has no credits, no contacts and nothing to brag about. As your mother would tell you: If you don't have anything nice to say, don't say anything at all. Keep the last section brief if you must, rather than going on and on about being an "active blogger" or having one poem published in your college literary magazine.

Following some information about yourself, it's time to wrap up the query and propose sending more material. A simple way to do this is by saying "The script is complete. May I send you the treatment and full screenplay?"

Here are the elements of a query letter in the example on the facing page:

A Include all of your contact information—including phone and e-mail—as centered information at the top.

B Use proper greetings and last names.

C Include a reason for contacting the reader.

D Try and keep the pitch to one paragraph.

E Regarding your credentials, be concise and honest.

Treatments and Log Lines

Introduction to the Treatment

Nobody reads a full script in Hollywood anymore. Execs don't want to put in the time to read a 90-page comedy script, much less a 180-page epic. They want to know if the goods are there before they invest their precious time, and this is where the treatment comes in. Think of it as reading the back cover of a book before you invest in buying it. You'd never just pay for a book without knowing what type of story to expect. So it is with the movie industry. The treatment is the essential selling tool that can make or break your script.

What is a Treatment

A treatment is a short document written in prose form and in the present tense that emphasizes, with vivid description, the major elements of a screenplay.

That's a very broad definition, to be sure. And while the main purpose of a treatment is as a selling tool, there are variations of the definition to consider.

1. A treatment could be your first attempt toward selling your screenplay to a producer, your first try at getting someone to pay you to write the script.
2. A treatment could be a sales tool for a script that you've already written—a shorter, prose version of the screenplay's story for producers to read, to pique their interest in your project and entice them to read your screenplay.
3. A treatment could describe how you intend to attack a rewrite, either of your own script or of another writer's script. Often when a producer hires a writer to do a rewrite, they'll ask for a treatment first.
4. A treatment could be the first step toward writing your screenplay—it could be one of the first steps toward getting your story down on paper. Maybe you don't have time to write the screenplay yet—a treatment can help cement the story in your mind (and on paper) so that you can work on it later.

Why Write a Treatment?

Ultimately, the best reason to write a treatment is that the process of writing your treatment can help you write a better script. It can be easier to find and solve structural challenges, plot incongruities, lapses in logic, etc. in the prose treatment format than it is to find and solve those challenges in the screenplay format.

Writing a screenplay is a step-by-step process, and some steps are more involved than others. Writing a treatment is a very achievable step in the screenwriting process, and taking that step from beginning to end can be a rewarding boost for your writing ego.

Writing a treatment helps give tangible shape to your story, and makes sharing your story with others simpler and more precise. If you can share your story with others, you can get feedback, which may open up more channels in your brain and help your story to grow. The treatment format is much easier to read and comprehend for people who aren't familiar with the screenplay format.

You might not be ready to write your complete screenplay yet—you might not have time, you might not be fully committed to the idea. Writing a treatment is a good stopgap measure, so that an idea doesn't just exist as an idea—it may exist as something you can sell, share with a collaborator, or simply file away for a rainy day.

When is a Treatment Used

A treatment is usually used when you begin the process of selling your script. When you pitch your script to a producer and he shows interest in your script, he will most likely ask you to send over the treatment. This way, he can review the story and see if he is interested in reading the full script.

Think of the treatment as your business card—the thing you leave behind after you've pitched your story.

You may have heard of writers who sell a script based only a treatment. Yes, this happens, but this happens only for established writers with a track record of produced scripts. They have proven to Hollywood that they can write a blockbuster script, so buyers know that if they like the treatment, they will most likely love the script.

The treatment can also be used as an outline for the writer before he begins his script. It's smart to either outline or summarize a script before you begin writing. If you can complete the story in a smaller form, you know that you'll be able to sustain it in the longer script format. Architects don't erect a building without first designing a blueprint and then creating a model of the structure. The outline is your blueprint and the treatment is your model.

Treatment vs. Synopsis, Coverage, Beat Sheet and Outline

The term treatment is thrown around loosely in Hollywood, and you can be sure that you'll hear a different definition each time you ask. Some buyers will request a treatment when they really want a synopsis, an outline or a beat sheet. So what are the definitions of the other items?

Synopsis

A Synopsis is a brief description of a story's plot or a straightforward presentation of the scenes and events in a story. It is not a selling tool, but rather a summation of the story, and is typically no more than 2 pages long. It's generally used by professional script readers when writing coverage on a script.

Coverage

Coverage is the name of the document generated by the buyer's in house script readers. The main purpose of this document is to assess the commercial viability of the script. The reader supplies the buyer with the basic identifying information of the script, a synopsis, their comments on the script and a rating chart on all of the elements of the script, including characters, dialogue, action, setting, and commercial appeal. The reader then rates the script "pass" (no, thanks. Don't call us, cause we're certainly not gonna call you) "consider" (maybe someone we know can rewrite this puppy into something marketable) or "recommend" (this is the script that will move me from script reader hell to producing heaven!).

Beat Sheet

A Beat Sheet lists the sequence of major events that takes place in a script. It shows what will happen to the main character, and the order in which the events will occur. It can be anywhere from a short paragraph to three pages. Each beat is described in only 1-2 sentences.

Here is an extremely short example from "Die Hard."

1. New York Detective John McClane flies to Los Angeles to reconcile with his wife Holly at her company Christmas party.
2. When he arrives at Holly's high-rise office building, they argue and Holly leaves McClane alone in her executive bathroom.
3. From the bathroom, McClane hears terrorists, lead by Hans Gruber, break in and take over the building.
4. McClane witnesses the murder of Takagi, the CEO of the company, by Gruber and decides to take action.
5. McClane kills the brother of the lead henchman, Karl, and many other terrorists. He greatly angers Hans and Karl in the process.
6. McClane battles the terrorists with the help of a lone police officer.
7. The other police are against McClane and he feels alone in his fight. The police approach fails, so McClane is totally alone.
8. McClane fights Karl, kills him and prepares to go save Holly from Gruber.
9. Seemingly outnumbered, McClane appears to give up.
10. Using his New York wits, McClane kills Gruber and saves Holly.

Outline

An outline is a list of the scenes that make up a screenplay, from FADE IN to FADE OUT. Every writer has a different method of outlining—some are very detailed, while some list only a sentence or even just a word for each scene.

A good way to start a screenplay is to write a beat sheet, an outline and then a treatment. If you work out the story problems with these three tools, you will find that writing the actual script is a breeze.

Why Do I Need a Treatment

Besides being an important selling tool, a treatment allows you to see if your idea can sustain a feature-length film. Many writers take an idea straight to screenplay form, and then find 30 pages in that there is not enough story to continue the script. In this short summary form, you will also be able to identify any weaknesses in your plot, theme and characters.

It is much easier to find and solve these challenges in the prose treatment form than it is to locate them in the screenplay format.

How Long Should It Be?

Sadly, there is no cut and dry length for a treatment. Generally, treatments vary in length from 1-25 pages.

A general rule—the more power the executive holds, the shorter the treatment you should send them. It is recommended to have a few different versions of your treatment. Besides a lengthy summary of the story, have a quick one pager on hand.

What Is the Format?

Your treatment should be written in prose form, and in 12 point Courier font. In essence, the treatment looks like a short story. There should be one line of space between each paragraph, and no indenting.

DON'T insert dialogue, slug lines, or anything else in screenplay format.

DO use standard punctuation for dialogue.

However, be careful not to rely on much dialogue in your treatment in order to effectively tell the story in 10 pages or less. A few carefully chosen thematic lines will suffice. For instance, the treatment for "Forrest Gump" would likely use the line, "Life is like a box of chocolates. You never know what you're gonna get," because it is used throughout the script as a thematic tag line.

What Should I Aspire to Do with the Treatment?

The treatment should not look, sound or read like an outline, a beat sheet or a screenplay. The essence of the story and the characters should be evoked through exhilarating language and imagery. It should sound like an excited moviegoer recanting the details of a film he just saw that was thought provoking, exhilarating and made him feel like he just had to share all the details with his friends. The prose you use in a treatment should be different than the narrative lines of a screenplay.

The beginning of the treatment has to grab the reader and not let go until the very end. Your reader should be able to see the script play out on the silver screen in front of his or her very eyes. After reading the treatment, the reader should be on fire to get this script to her boss, pronto!

The Log Line

A Log Line is a one sentence description of your film. It's really that simple. You've seen log lines, even if you're not aware of it. In essence, TV Guide descriptions of films are log lines. A log line may describe the following elements:

- Genre—comedy, drama, thriller, love story, etc.
- Setting—time and place, locale, other pertinent information
- Plot—the main narrative thrust of the story
- Character—the lead character or group of characters
- Theme—the main subject of the movie

A log line need not contain the following elements:

- Character names (unless the characters are historical figures)
- Back story
- Qualitative judgments—"A hilarious story..." "A fascinating tale..."
- Comparisons to other films—"It's 'Jaws' meets 'Mary Poppins'..."

Here are a few examples of log lines for well-known films. See if you can guess the film being described (the answers are right below, so don't cheat!):

1. A throwback to the serial adventure films of the 1930s, this film is the story of a heroic archeologist who races against the Nazis to find a powerful artifact that can change the course of history.
2. Set at a small American college in the early 1960s, this broad comedy follows a fraternity full of misfits through a year of parties, mishaps and food fights.
3. An illiterate boy looks to become a contestant on the Hindi version of "Who Wants to be A Millionaire" in order to re-establish contact with the girl he loves, who is an ardent fan of the show.

4. A man decides to change his life by saying 'yes' to everything that comes his way. On his journey, he wins $45,000, meets a hypnotic dog, obtains a nursing degree, travels the globe, and finds romance.
5. A behind-the-scenes view of the 2000 presidential election and the scandal that ensued in the weeks following.

Get the idea? The log line is designed to describe and to tease, like a line of advertising copy for your film. It has to be accurate, it can't be misleading. It's the first sentence a producer or executive is going to read, and you've got to make sure it isn't the last. Make it count.

By the way, the log lines above are for:

1. "Raiders of the Lost Ark"
2. "Animal House"
3. "Slumdog Millionaire"
4. "Yes Man"
5. "Recount"

Why Is the Log Line Important in a Treatment?

The log line is the first sentence an executive will ever read from your hand. It's also the shorthand that executives will use to discuss your project with each other. If a junior executive reads your treatment and likes it, she'll need to tell her boss about the project in order to move it to the next step (probably a meeting between you and the boss).

The boss will ask the junior executive "What's it about?" The junior executive will respond with your log line, if you've written it well and accurately. You are helping to provide the junior executive with the tools she needs to help move your project forward. If you don't provide a log line at the beginning of your treatment, you rely on the junior executive's ability to digest your treatment and come up with a good log line of her own. Even in a collaborative art form like filmmaking, it's never a good idea to leave a job undone for someone else to do if you are more capable of doing it yourself. And who knows your story better than you do? Write a great log line for your treatment, and you'll know that your treatment is being discussed in your own words.

Who Is the Log Line For

The log line is for the buyer: the executive, the producer, the agent. By writing a log line for your treatment, you are helping them to process your material more efficiently. Getting a movie made is a sales process, a constant, revolving door sales process. You sell your work to an agent, who then sells your work to a producer, who then sells it to a director, who then sells it to actors and key crew members.

Once the movie is made, the sales process starts all over again, as the producer has to sell the movie to distributors and marketing executives, who have to sell the film to theater owners who have to sell the film to audiences. A good log line can ride the film all the way from start to finish, helping to sell it at each step.

Should the Log Line Refer to Other Movies?

No. It used to be popular to write log lines that were entirely film references. This practice became so prevalent that it became a cliché, and should be avoided if at all possible. Nothing says "schlock" as quickly as a "Die Hard" reference—the classic action movie reference that every movie strived for in the early 1990s. "Speed" was called "Die Hard" on a bus. "Passenger 57" was called "Die Hard" on a plane. Descriptive as these log lines may be, they read as lazy writing, and if your writing isn't even original in the log line, who will be interested in reading your treatment or your script? Avoid hucksterism, overselling and hype. It's a turnoff.

How Long Should the Log Line Be

Your log line should be one sentence long. Pare it down to its essence, and don't let your sentence become a run-on. Try it out loud, see if it works. You don't have to follow every twist and turn of the plot in your log line, you only have to convey the flavor of the script. One sentence will do it.

What Is the Difference Between the Log Line and the Theme?

Your log line is a sales tool that is a teaser and an invitation to read your script. The theme may be contained in the log line, but not necessarily. Theme is the real answer to "What is your script about?" and Theme need not be confined to a one sentence answer. Theme is often related to the discovery that your main character makes during the course of the film. For instance, in "Raiders of the Lost Ark," Indiana Jones discovers that people are actually more important to him than historical artifacts. In "Animal House," the Deltas discover that the camaraderie that they've discovered in their fraternity is the real lasting value of their college experience, not their class work or their social status on campus.

In Closing

You've spent months or years (or even decades) on your script, and so it may be frustrating to jump through the hoops of the submission process—but it's important. Don't give readers an excuse to ignore your work. You must craft a killer query, treatment and log line before the script gets its big shot. Compose them well, and you're on your way to selling that screenplay.

Legal 411 for Screenwriters

By Dinah Perez, Esq.

As a practicing entertainment attorney for nearly two decades, I have represented many writers. I have counseled them on the legal issues related to their writing endeavors, negotiated their agreements with agents and managers, helped them sell their screenplays, and settled their disputes with other writers and producers.

You need to be diligent when it comes to dealing with the legal issues that may arise while you are writing and selling your screenplay, including hiring an agent and manager. Otherwise, you may end up jointly owning your screenplay with another writer, though it was not your intention; may be sued for copyright infringement for incorporating copyright protected material into your screenplay that you thought was in the public domain; could waste your time writing a derivative work based on an original whose rights you cannot acquire; may not be paid all the compensation and may not secure rights you're entitled to when you sell your screenplay; may not be able to shop or sell your screenplay; and may find it impossible to replace your current agent or manager. Overall, consulting with an entertainment attorney up front is much more cost efficient that attempting to fix mistakes and settle disputes that could have been avoided. Whenever I say "attorney" herein, I mean "entertainment attorney."

This chapter endeavors to inform you of the legal issues that exist as you navigate through the process of writing, shopping, selling your screenplay, and hiring an agent, manager, and attorney. This is not a full exploration of the law, nor is it intended to make you an expert in the field. Rather, it is meant to help you spot the issues that may require legal counsel and the important deal terms of the agreements into which you may enter into as a screenwriter. There is a primer on the basics of copyright law up front. Thereafter, I have organized the information in a sequential manner that guides you on your journey, start to finish.

Copyright

A "copyright" is a form of protection for the authors of original content which, with few exceptions, bestows upon authors of intellectual property, such as a book, play, magazine article, news story, video game, screenplay, motion pictures, etc., the exclusive right to reproduce, distribute, perform, prepare and sell their creations.[1] Copyright protection does not extend to ideas—only to their expression. The current term of copyright is the life of the author plus 70 years unless the work was made as a work-for-hire. For works made for hire, anonymous works, and pseudonymous works, the term of copyright is 95 years from first publication or 120 years from its creation, whichever is shorter.[2] For works made for hire, anonymous works, and pseudonymous works, the term of copyright is 95 years from first publication or 120 years from its creation, whichever is shorter. Copyright is automatic the moment the work is fixed in a tangible medium, like a printed page, a hard drive, a flash drive, digital recording, film, etc.[2] Copyright law may impact your use of any of the source material you incorporate into your screenplay, and the ownership of your screenplay if you collaborate with another writer.

Copyright protection means that you own the object of your creation and that anyone who wants to use it needs to acquire the right to do so from you. In fact, absent an exception, anyone who uses your copyright protected work without your assent is infringing on your copyright. Likewise, you cannot use another's work without permission unless said work is in the public domain (the work does not have a valid copyright), or you are claiming your use is a "Fair Use." This latter exception to the Copyright Act allows you to utilize another's work without permission for the purpose of "criticism, comment, news reporting, teaching (including multiple copies for classroom use), scholarship, or research" without infringing copyright.[3] I advise that you proceed with caution and consult with an attorney if you are claiming a Fair Use exception to the Copyright Act because the exception is far narrower than most people realize.

Though copyright protection is automatic, I strongly urge you to spend the money to formally register a copyright for your treatment (if you are going to be pitching it prior to writing the screenplay) and screenplay once you have completed them. It costs $35 to register a copyright online for a single work, author and claimant if it is not a work-for hire, $55 if the author and claimant are not the same and/or the work was created as a work-for-hire.[4] The benefits that you gain from the registration far outweigh the cost and time it takes to complete the registration form online. Copyright registration within five years of first publication provides proof of ownership and affords you the opportunity to litigate against infringers, since registration is a prerequisite to filing a legal claim. Registration within three month of first publication and prior to an infringement allows a court to award you statutory damages of up to $150,0000 (or actual damages and profits, if they are more than the statutory damages) as well as attorneys' fees. You may only be awarded actual damages and profits if you do not register within the first three months of publication or prior to an infringement.[5]

Registration of your copyright with the U.S. Copyright Office is the only registration that affords the benefits in the preceding paragraph. The "poor man's copyright," which entails you mailing your screenplay (or other creation) to yourself and you saving the unopened package, provides no more protection than the unregistered copyright. The Writers Guild of America ("WGA") script registration service, which allows you to register ideas, treatments, screenplays, and teleplays, may serve to potentially provide proof as to the day of existence of your registered material, but does not convey the benefits of copyright registration. I recommend registering with WGA when a production company requests it, or when what you have created is not entitled to copyright protection. WGA registration costs $20 for non-members and $10 for members.

Note that in order for anyone to infringe on your screenplay's copyright they actually have to copy it. There is no infringement unless the party you are accusing had access to your screenplay and there is substantial similarity of the copyright protected elements in your screenplay and the screenplay or picture you are claiming is infringing on yours. You have no copyright infringement claim if someone independently creates a screenplay that is similar to yours.

Ready, Set … Pause

You have come up with an idea for a screenplay which you want to begin writing. I suggest that you stop and ponder what you intend to write and the potential legal issues that may exist at this juncture. Pausing long enough to consider what may be required legally of you at the start of every writing endeavor will help you avoid legal errors and costly mistakes that may undermine your goals.

Ask yourself the questions that follow in order to determine if you need to consult with and/or hire an attorney. Are you writing by yourself or with a writing partner? Is the story you want to tell completely fictional and original to you? Is your screenplay based on, or inspired by, outside source material, like a book, play, news article, magazine article, or trial transcript? Are you writing about a living person? It is important that you ask yourself these questions at the outset so that you do not waste time writing something you cannot sell.

Resist the temptation to use a boilerplate agreement not specifically drafted for you by an attorney. Chances are you do not know enough about the law, or crafting an agreement, to revise the agreement without creating a litigation worthy mistake, or one that forces you to shelve your screenplay. The time that you are investing writing warrants the cost of hiring an attorney to do things right.

Writing the Screenplay

Collaborations

A "collaboration" occurs when you write with another writer. You have to consider the long-term implications of any writing partnership because the term of copyright, in the proceeds of your collaboration, is your life plus 70 years. As such, it is important that your writing partner and you share a similar vision for the screenplay you intend to write, that you agree on the deal terms of your writing partnership, and that you assess the relationship and its long term viability. Note that your writing partner and you will equally co-own the screenplay you write together the moment you fix it in a tangible medium because copyright automatically attaches regardless of oral agreements or intention to the contrary.

I strongly urge that you retain an attorney, if you do not already have one, and that you enter into a "Collaboration Agreement," a three to four page agreement that addresses all of the pertinent terms of your writing partnership, e.g., split of copyright and revenues, who gets the first position credit, who gets to make the final decision if you disagree on a creative or business issue, who will be responsible for shopping the screenplay, who approves the sale, etc. Your attorney will help you compromise when your writing partner and you cannot seem to agree on a deal term so that you both feel fairly treated. When a client and collaborator cannot agree on the credit, I suggest that one take the first position credit on screen and the other in ads. When both want final approval, I suggest that one have it on business decisions and the other on creative ones. You can start writing once you have executed the Collaboration Agreement. If you cannot agree, despite the attorney's efforts, then you both just walk away, only having expended the legal fees. This is a small price to pay to avoid a time-intensive and potentially costly dispute down the line.

What happens if you started writing without a Collaboration Agreement and now realize that you do not want to complete the screenplay with your writing partner? You may not have to shelve what you have written thus far if your writing partner is willing to assign it to you. To "assign" means to transfer an asset. You want the other writer to transfer his/her interest in the screenplay to you. This is done via an "Assignment," since copyright law requires that a transfer of a copyright interest be affected by a written document signed by the party assigning rights.[3] I suggest that you execute an Assignment, even if what you have written does not qualify for copyright protection. In addition to drafting the Assignment, an attorney can motivate a recalcitrant collaborator by negotiating terms whereby he/she is paid a portion of the screenplay's sale price. Unfortunately, you may have to chalk this experience up to a lesson learned if your collaborator and you are at an impasse. The alternative, in such a circumstance, is that you assign the results and proceeds of your collaboration to the other writer.

Original Fictional Screenplays

You can proceed to write without regard to any legal issues if you are writing a completely original screenplay either on your own or with a writing partner, as long as you have entered into a Collaboration Agreement. For the purposes of this chapter, "completely original to you" means that you are writing a work of fiction that is not based on outside material, be it a book, play, magazine article, life story, video game, etc. If you are doing research, then it is best that you determine if any of the other sections of this chapter apply to your use of the source materials you may be incorporating into your screenplay.

Screenplays Based on Public Domain Material

You may write a screenplay that is an adaptation of, or based upon, a work that is in the public domain without infringing its copyright. A work is in "Public Domain" when no one owns that work's copyright or if the work never qualified for copyright protection. A work is in the public domain because it was not registered for copyright at a time when an actual registration was mandatory, did not comply with the formalities of the Copyright Act, or the copyright term has expired. You can use a work that is in public domain without securing permission to do so from the author. Works in the public domain include the following: Works published between 1923 and 1977 that were never registered for copyright; works published prior to 1923; works published between 1923 and 1963 that were registered for copyright but published without a copyright notice; works published between 1978 and March 1, 1989 without a copyright notice and without a subsequent registration (within 5 years); unpublished works from authors who died prior to 1944; unpublished anonymous or pseudonymous works created prior to 1894; unpublished works created prior to 1894 when the author's date of death is unknown; and, foreign works that are in the public domain in their country of origin.[6]

Facts, numbers, events, government works (written by government employees), and ideas do not qualify for copyright protection and are, therefore, also in the public domain. Keep in mind that though the aforementioned are in the public domain, their expression and any theories that are original to the author may be protected by copyright. Be extremely careful when using material in historical biographies. Do extensive research in order to separate the historical facts from the author's theories and expression thereof.

Keep your notes and research and annotate your screenplay if you are including any public domain works or information in your screenplay; this may seem burdensome, but you will be grateful you did it if you are ever accused of copyright infringement, since you may have to provide it to prove your innocence. Furthermore, whoever produces your screenplay is going to purchase Errors and Omissions Insurance which, among other things, insures producers against copyright infringement law suits. The insurance carrier may require an opinion letter from an attorney, who may request the annotated script from you. It is far easier to annotate a script as you write than to try to piece it together after the fact.

You are not required to credit the source of your public domain materials. Notwithstanding, I recommend that you credit the author and work if your screenplay is an adaptation of it, or if your screenplay is based upon the work. You do not need to credit your research sources for facts, numbers and such.

Derivative Works

You need to secure the author's or publisher's ("author/publisher") permission if you want to adapt or write a screenplay based upon or inspired by another literary work, such as a book, play, magazine article, essay, etc. Do not take the risk of writing first and attempting to acquire rights afterwards. You are not only infringing copyright when you do this—you are also potentially wasting your time because the author/publisher of the literary work may refuse to let you acquire the rights you need to proceed. They do not always want to have their literary works adapted to the big screen and, even if they do, may prefer to do business with a studio, which is more likely to pay them hefty option fees and purchase prices. If that is the case, it is best that you discover it up front before you invest your time.

Copyright protection applies to that portion of a derivative work created by you, but not to the original work itself. If you adapt a book, your adaptation is protected by copyright, but you acquire no rights in the original materials from the underlying book. In other words, the characters, locations, dialogue, storyline and other elements from the book belong to its author/publisher. The same goes any for public domain facts you incorporate into your screenplay; they remain in the public domain while your expression of those facts is subject to copyright protection.

You acquire the rights to a literary work by entering into an "Option/Purchase Agreement" whereby you have the exclusive option to buy said literary work for a determined period of time. The Option/Purchase Agreement has two components: the Option Agreement ("Option") itself states how much time you have to buy the literary work, and the purchase agreement includes the sale price and rights to be granted. You purchase the literary work by exercising the Option and paying the purchase price prior to the Option's expiration date. You do not actually purchase the literary work until the commencement of principal photography—when you know that the picture is being produced.

Options usually run in one year increments ("option period(s)") and can have one or more extensions. I recommend a one year initial option period with a minimum of two one year extension periods. You pay an "option fee" at the commencement of each option period. Option fees are considered advances and, therefore, may be applicable against the purchase price. If you have paid $20,000 in applicable option fees, when you exercise the Option, you pay $80,000 of the total $100,000 purchase price. If you do not make the option fees applicable, then you pay the full purchase price irrespective of the option fees paid. The Option expires if you let it lapse due to non-payment of the applicable option fee, so be sure to extend the Option one month prior to its expiration; to avoid any mishaps mail the option fee and notice of extension via registered mail return receipt requested.

My clients have paid option fees as low as $1 and as high as $25,000 per option period. Expect to deplete your bank account if you are entering into an Option/Purchase Agreement on behalf of a best-selling book or play, or a magazine article or news story from a well known publication. Authors/publishers in the know expect an option fee equal to 10% of the purchase price. Some may consider this an industry standard—I do not because this is a point of negotiation versus a hard and fast rule. If you cannot afford to pay an option fee equal to 10% of the purchase price, then offer what you can pay, keeping in mind that you do not want to insult the author/publisher. Among other things, I may offer to make one or more of the option fees non-applicable if they are on the low end and it seems like they may be keeping the author/publisher from agreeing to the Option/Purchase Agreement. A "free" Option may be possible if you are acquiring a self-published or obscure book or play, or an article published in a relatively unknown publication. Notwithstanding that the Option is free, you should pay at least one dollar per option period so that the Option/Purchase Agreement does not fail for lack of consideration of some kind. "Consideration" is necessary for the formation of a binding contract—each party to the transaction needs to get a benefit.

The Option/Purchase Agreement for the literary work upon which you are basing your screenplay will determine whether you can sell your creation upon its completion. You will not be able to sell your screenplay if you go about it incorrectly or offer too high a purchase price. I advise that you hire an attorney to help you negotiate and draft an Option/Purchase Agreement that provides you with all the rights you need to deliver to your screenplay's buyer.

Remakes and Sequels Based on Pre-Existing Pictures

Do not write a screenplay based on a previously released motion picture or television show. This is not only copyright infringement—it is a monumental waste of your time! Under no uncertain terms will the motion picture studio or television network ("studio/network") which produced the original ever give you permission to write a sequel or remake based on their original motion picture or television show; they do not let third parties acquire an interest in their library. When the studio/network is ready, it will develop the remake or sequel in-house, with writers of their own choosing. Delete the screenplay if you have already written it, since you cannot use it as a writing sample or share it with anyone due to copyright infringement. Do not waste your money hiring an attorney to attempt to make a submission for you since the studio/network always responds with a resounding, "no." They do not want to read your screenplay because they do not want to risk you filing a copyright infringement, unjust enrichment, and/or breach of implied contract law suit against them, when they produce a remake or sequel that contains elements that were in your submitted screenplay. This happened to MGM and Sylvester Stallone when a writer submitted his version of "Rocky IV" to them. MGM and Sylvester Stallone prevailed over the writer because the "Rocky" characters were entitled to copyright protection.

Life Stories

"Private Persons"

Every living person has the "right of privacy"—the right to be left alone and the right to keep private facts from the public. As a consequence thereof, you need to enter into a Life Story Agreement if the subject of your screenplay is a "private person" whose story has not been in the national news and, hence, is not known by the general public. Do not commence writing until you have entered into a Life Story Agreement. The only exception here is if you are writing about a deceased person, since the right of privacy terminates upon death.

A Life Story Agreement is an agreement whereby the person whose life story you are writing (the "subject" of your screenplay) gives you permission to base your screenplay on his/her life story. It also allows your screenplay's buyer to produce and distribute the picture based on your screenplay. The Life Story Agreement is an Option/Purchase Agreement which takes into account the personal nature of the rights being acquired. The option fee and purchase price for a private person's Life Story Agreement are generally on the low end, because the life story is arguably not in big demand. Both tend to be far lower than the subject usually expects. It is more likely that the purchase price will be in the $80,000 range than the $1 million—the sum a subject asked of a client of mine a couple of years ago. You will not be able to find a buyer for your screenplay if you overpay for the rights, so that is something to always keep in mind.

The Life Story Agreement will give you access to the subject's life story via any news clippings, journals, and interviews. Do not be surprised if the subject wants "final approval" of the screenplay. You can grant the subject the right to comment on a draft of your screenplay, but never final approval. The former is just feedback, the latter means that the subject can stop you from producing any version of the screenplay he/she does not like. Needless-to-say, you never give a subject final approval of the screenplay.

The Life Story Agreement conveys upon you the right to write the screenplay, but it does not give you permission to defame or portray the subject of your screenplay in a false light without legal repercussions. You can take certain dramatic license with the story, but cannot depict the subject in an untrue and in an inaccurate manner—especially one that would be offensive or damaging to him/her. Let the subject comment on the screenplay so that you know where you have potential issues. It is much easier and cost efficient to fix the issues during the writing process than to address them in a court of law. Note that defamation and false light are not the same thing: the former is making false statements that harm a person's reputation and the latter is making untrue statements that depict a person in a false light and are offensive or cause the person embarrassment.

"Public Persons"

Celebrities, politicians, and other persons in whom the general public has great interest are all considered "public persons" because they have disclosed their private facts and live so much of their lives out in the public. As a consequence, public persons have a more limited right of privacy than the private person, and have a lesser expectation of it.

You have a lot of leeway to write about a politician because of the First Amendment and the public's right and need to know about any individual running for, or in, political office.[7] You may disclose truthful facts about politicians, e.g., that a politician is taking bribes, is an alcoholic or drug addict, has cancer, etc. Limit disclosure to facts that impact the politician's ability to do his/her job or how he/she carries out the responsibilities of office. You do not have the same berth where a living celebrity is concerned. If you want to avoid a costly judgment in favor of a celebrity, use facts that are already in the public consciousness, garnered from the likes of a trial transcript, news story, magazine article, biography, autobiography, television interviews, etc.

In the category of public persons are criminals whose crimes have catapulted them to celebrity status. Casey Anthony, Amy Fisher, Ted Bundy, and David Berkowitz aka the Son of Sam are what I call "celebrity criminals." The aforementioned have all had pictures produced about them, but not all entered into Life Story Agreements with the television networks that produced movies about them. In fact, two of the three networks that produced pictures about Amy Fisher, the "Long Island Lolita," did so without a Life Story Agreement. You can write about a celebrity criminal as long as you stick to the facts disclosed in court during a trial and/or are in the public domain.

Notwithstanding, since the public person has a right to privacy, limited though it may be, I always recommend that you consult with an attorney and that you enter into a Life Story Agreement rather than proceed without one. In order to sell your screenplay, you are going to have to warrant and represent that you have not invaded anyone's right of privacy, and will be required to agree to indemnify and hold harmless the producer if you breach that warranty and representation. This means that you have to reimburse the producer for any damages the producer suffers due to your breach of the right of privacy via your screenplay. The Life Story Agreement greatly eliminates the risk of litigation and a costly judgment, as long as you do not defame or portray your subject in a false light (there has to be an element of maliciousness where celebrities are concerned). The producer and distributor may want the assurances and rights granted via the Life Story Agreement and may make it a condition of financing and distribution. Also, you may want the public person's cooperation either because you may want to interview him/her to gain access to information that was not previously disclosed and/or need his/her help in securing any releases from other individuals integral to the life story.

The Right of Publicity

Every person, be they private or public, also has the "right of publicity," which gives everyone the right to control the commercial exploitation of their name, likeness, voice, and any other identifying aspect of their persona. In other words, your screenplay's producer cannot advertise and distribute a picture based on your screenplay unless you acquired the subject's right of publicity. This is best done via a Life Story Agreement, which grants the buyer the right to use the subject's, name, voice and likeness to produce, advertise, and distribute the picture.

Also, though the right of privacy terminates at death, the right of publicity does not always because state law determines whether the right dies or survives. For example, in New York, the right of publicity is extinguished at death for persons domiciled there[8] and, as per California statute, the right of publicity is a descendible property right that currently survives death by 70 years (for persons who died there prior to 1985).[9] You need to know where the subject of your screenplay died in order to ascertain whether the right of publicity ended with, or outlived, your subject's life.

Representation: Signing with an Agent or Manager

You are going to need representation via an agent or manager once you are done writing your screenplay. The California Talent Agency Act ("TAA") says that only licensed "agents" may procure, offer, promise, or attempt to procure employment or engagements for you. Agents must limit their commissions to 10% of what you earn, post a $50,000 surety bond with the Labor Commissioner, submit their artist agreement for approval by the Labor Commissioner, and segregate client monies from agency monies in a client trust fund.[10] In addition, agents are not supposed to have a conflict of interest with their clients, which means that they do not attach themselves to produce their clients' screenplays.

Managers are not licensed agents and, therefore, are not supposed to engage in agent type activities, such as pitching, shopping screenplays, and attempting to secure writing assignments. Because of the TAA, managers are limited to advising their clients on matters related to their careers, helping their clients secure agency representation, and assisting in the development of their clients' screenplays. They cannot procure, promise to procure or attempt to procure work. Since managers are not agents, they are not required to post a surety bond or maintain a client trust account, and have no limit on their commissions—though the industry standard is 10%. Notwithstanding the TAA, most literary managers do engage in agent type activities on behalf of their clients when their clients lack agency representation. Managers risk rescission of the management agreement with you, and forfeiture of past and future commissions from you, if you file a complaint against them with the California Labor Commissioner alleging that the manager engaged in activities in violation of the TAA, and the California Labor Commissioner determines that your allegations are true.

I am grateful for every reputable manager who works to create and improve the career of any writer—more so when the writer is not represented by an agent. I believe managers should be paid for the value of services they render regardless of the TAA. They should get to collect commissions if their services contributed to your success and earnings. The only problem I have with managers is that their interests are very often in conflict with those of their clients. This occurs when managers attempt to attach themselves to produce their clients' screenplays. A manager friend tells me that she should be credited and paid as a producer because the development work that she does with her clients is actually a producer's job. I disagree.

My biggest concern with managers attaching themselves to produce is that it might deter a producer from going forward—especially if the manager has not produced before. It's best to have an agreement with the manager whereby the manager does not insist on being attached, or will step aside if his/her attachment negatively impacts the negotiation. If necessary, I would offer the manager a higher commission (up to 20% total) to compensate him/her for development services.

Notwithstanding the possible drawbacks, there are a couple of advantages when a manager produces: you have someone advocating on your behalf and you pay a lower commission because the manager's producing fee is credited against the commission you owe. (A commission of $100,000 gets reduced to $20,000 if the manager's producing fee is $80,000.) Whether you want a manager/producer representing you is something that you need to consider prior to entering into the management agreement. Very often, managers will decline representation if they cannot produce the material they develop.

Standard agency and management agreements include a variety of clauses related to your relationship with the agent and/or manager, their duties, compensation, the term of the agreement, how you may be able to terminate the agreement do to non-performance, etc. The agreement you sign most likely will not contain a "sunset clause" unless your attorney makes it a requirement.

A "sunset clause" reduces and eventually terminates continuing commissions owed to the agent and/or manager once the agreement terminates. The need for a sunset clause most often arises when your agent and/or manager secures you a position as a staff writer on a television series, sells your screenplay and it spins off into a series, or your screenplay becomes a studio franchise. The agent or manager wants to receive his/her commission on any monies earned by you, in perpetuity, from agreements you entered into during the term of their representation—even after their agreement with you terminates. The problem with this is that whoever represents you next is going to want to commission all your earnings as payment for the services they are rendering in the present. Since agents individually or jointly cannot charge you in excess of 10%, you are in the position of not being able to hire any agent that wants to commission the pre-existing deal, which is likely most of them. You could end up paying a double commission to your managers, since there is no restriction as to how much they can charge.

The alternative is the sunset clause whereby the commission to the previous agent and/or manager is reduced by 33 ⅓% per year until it zeroes out—you pay the new agent or manager that commission on an escalating basis until he/she is receiving 100% of the commission on those earnings. You will only reap the benefit of the sunset clause if it is negotiated into your agreement up front, since the agent will not incorporate it after the fact because it impacts them negatively.

Whether you need both an agent and manager depends on where you are in your career. As I said above, the agent's job is to sell you while the manager's job is to develop you. You are more likely to need a manager earlier in your career, when you do not have an agent, need help getting your career off the ground, and need help developing your talent. You always need an agent. It is highly unlikely that you are going to be able to secure an agent or manager with the top five companies early in your career—unless you are introduced by someone whose opinion they value or you have been extremely successful in another medium, e.g., you have a best-selling novel, graphic novel or video game. Sign with the most reputable agent and/or manager you can at this time. You can upgrade later if the opportunity presents itself.

Your relationship with your agent or manager, how much money you get to keep, what expenses you are reimbursing the manager for, how much help you get from both, and how long you are tied to them is going to be dictated by the agreement you sign. You will regret not having hired an attorney to advise you where this agreement is concerned when you realize that you could have made a better deal and/or that the deal you made has drawbacks.

As far as your attorney goes, be sure to keep him/her in the loop at all times. My clients always end up with a better deal when their representatives and I work together. I always improve the financial terms, credit, make sure that my client reaps the benefits of a box office success, and/or include clauses that protect my client and maintain my client's involvement if the picture or series has a life beyond the original production.

Shopping and Submissions

Shopping

Your agent (or manager if you do not have an agent) will shop and submit your screenplay once you have completed it. "Shopping" is defined in the industry to mean marketing your screenplay in an effort to entering into an Option/Purchase Agreement. A "pitch" is a three to four minute oral summary of your screenplay. The producer and your agent will negotiate the terms of the Option/Purchase Agreement if the producer wants to develop and potentially produce a picture based on your screenplay. Again, I strongly recommend that you insist that your agent work jointly with your attorney to get you the best option fee, purchase price, and overall terms. Whatever additional monies you have to pay your attorney will be justified by the end result.

You can shop your screenplay directly to producers if you do not have an agent or manager. This directory includes within it the information you need to contact producers. When dealing with a producer that has a development department, contact a development executive, unless you have a pre-existing relationship with the producer. You will pitch your screenplay on that first call if you make contact, so be sure to have a prepared pitch and logline. A "logline" is a sentence summary of your script.

Protecting Your Ideas

You have to be careful not to "blurt out" the idea for your screenplay, since ideas are not protected by copyright law. A "blurt out" most often occurs when a writer meets a producer by chance, like at a party, restaurant, or in an elevator, and takes advantage of the moment by sharing the idea without asking for permission to do so. Producers do not want to be liable for hearing an unsolicited idea, nor should they be. Since it is not entitled to copyright protection, your idea is in the public domain and is up for grabs once you blurt it out. For the reasons stated below, I prefer that you pitch in a formal setting even if the producer grants you permission to pitch during the chance encounter.

Pitching your idea and/or screenplay in a business meeting goes a long way in protecting it because contract law fills the void that exists in copyright law. You can protect your idea by setting up an oral agreement or an implied-in-fact contract. Both require that you work smart and be patient enough to pitch in formal settings only.

An oral agreement is a spoken versus written contract. You protect your idea by creating an oral agreement with the producer for that purpose. You create the oral agreement during your pitch meeting by making disclosure of the idea contingent on the producer's agreement to your terms. Prior to pitching say, "As you know, I'm here to pitch my screenplay (or the idea for a screenplay), but before I do, I just want to make sure you are willing to credit me and purchase my screenplay for no less than WGA minimum if you use it. Can we agree to that?" Oral agreements are difficult to prove so be sure to create a paper trail to substantiate its existence. You do this by sending an email to confirm the scheduled meeting and its purpose beforehand. Afterwards, send the producer an email thanking him/her for the meeting, the purpose of the meeting, and reiterate the agreed upon oral agreement.

You can also protect an idea via an implied-in-fact contract, which is formed when you pitch in a formal setting and it is clear from the conduct that you met with the producer for the purpose of selling your idea and, hence expect payment for its use. The idea can even be based on material that is in the public domain, like a Shakespearean play, as was the case with Blaustein v. Burton.

Julian Blaustein, came up with the idea to produce "The Taming of the Shrew", starring Elizabeth Taylor and Richard Burton. He pitched the idea to Richard Burton's agent. Blaustein conditioned the disclosure on the agent being interested in his idea and Burton and Taylor being available to star in it. The agent confirmed both. Blaustein went ahead with the pitch. The agent responded positively and confirmed that it was something Burton and Taylor had not previously considered. Burton and Taylor went ahead and produced the picture without Blaustein's involvement. Blaustein sued for breach of an implied-in-fact contract and prevailed even though the idea was for material in the public domain.[11]

You see here why the conduct and circumstances under which the idea is pitched are so important. Blaustein would not have prevailed if the agent had informed him that Burton and Taylor were already developing the idea, had previously considered it, if they had produced the picture based on a screenplay they had received from an independent source, or if Blaustein had blurted out the idea in an informal setting. As with the oral agreement, I recommend that you create a paper trail as evidence of your meeting and your intentions.

Send an email confirming the meeting and its purpose. Send another afterward to evidence the fact that the meeting took place, what you pitched, and why.

Notwithstanding, the above, be aware that idea theft is rather rampant and difficult to prove. The trend is for courts tend to side with the studios/networks and producers versus the writers. The conundrum is that you risk theft when you pitch, but that you can never sell anything unless you do. In light of that, do everything you can to protect your idea. Never pitch without permission to do so, only do so in a formal setting, and create a paper trail. Do not pitch the idea for your completed screenplay until you have registered it with the U.S. Copyright Office since, among other things, it is prima facie evidence as to the date of your screenplay's existence. If you are pitching an idea for a screenplay that you have yet to write, at least write up a summary and register it with the WGA; this does not provide copyright protection, but you at least have proof as to the date of your idea's existence.

Submission Releases

If you are not represented by an agent or manager, it is likely that you will be required to sign a "Submission Release" when you ask to submit your screenplay to a producer or studio/network. A "Submission Release" is a written agreement whereby you relieve the recipient of your screenplay from liability should he/she use any of the content in your screenplay that is not protected by copyright, such as your idea or the public domain material incorporated therein. It also relieves the producer and studio/network of the obligation to pay you if it independently creates material similar to yours, or comes by it from an independent source. Furthermore, the Submission Release also states that the recipient will pay you fair market value if they use of your screenplay, or any portion thereof that is protected by copyright. The Submission Release is going to override any oral agreement you have made to the contrary with the producer once you sign it.

As onerous as Submission Releases are, I understand that producers and studios/networks require them as a form of protection against lawsuits that may or may not be warranted. You can pay an attorney to explain the Submission Release to you, but it is unlikely that the attorney will be able to convince the producer to revise it. You might be tempted to throw caution to the wind and sign the Submission Release if you are unrepresented by an agent or manager. I recommend that you ask the producer if he/she will accept an attorney submission instead. Your lawyer can make the submission for you if the producer agrees to accept it. If not, then I suggest that you continue pounding doors until you do find an agent or manager willing to represent you. I know that it is difficult to walk away from what you may think is your only opportunity, but you have to be patient unless you are willing to risk your screenplay.

Note that agents will also require that you sign a Submission Release as a condition to reading your screenplay. You cannot submit otherwise. Be aware that agents can share your screenplay with other agents and the agency's clients with impunity once you sign the Submission

Release. You might try having your manager make the submission, or asking if the agent will accept an attorney submission. Otherwise, you will have to take the risk if you want to the agent to consider representing you.

Sample Submission Release

_____ (Name of Production Company)

_____ (Title of Screenplay)

Dear _____:

I am submitting to you herewith the above referenced screenplay (hereinafter referred to as the "material") pursuant to the following terms and conditions.

1. I am interested in having you evaluate my material. I know that because of your stature in the industry that you receive many screenplays, treatments, ideas, stories, formats, and suggestions for screenplays. As a consequence thereof, I understand that you cannot read, accept, and evaluate the material unless I sign and return this Submission Release.

[The production company wants to protect itself from copyright infringement and breach of implied or oral contract claims on behalf of your submitted screenplay. This Submission Release, which is a binding agreement, will release the production company from liability for the aforementioned types of legal claims initiated by the person submitting the material.]

2. I represent and warrant that I am the material's author; that I am sole owner of the right, title and interest in and to the material; that I have the authority to make this submission and to grant the rights being conveyed to you hereunder; that the material does not infringe upon a third party's copyright; that the material does not violate anyone's right of privacy nor is it defamatory. I agree to indemnify you and hold you harmless from any claims, losses, judgments, and expenses (including reasonable legal fees and costs) that are incurred by you due to my breach of the aforementioned warranties and this Submission Release.

[You own the screenplay because you either wrote it or commissioned it as a work-for-hire. The production company wants you to warrant that you have the legal right and authority to submit the screenplay and to contract on its behalf. The production company wants an assurance that the screenplay is not going to result in a third party copyright infringement, right of privacy, or defamation claim against it should they to produce your screenplay. Via this clause, you agree to pay all of the losses and costs incurred by the production company if a legal claim is brought against the production company due to you breach of the warranties in this clause and the overall Submission Release.]

3. I understand that you create screenplays in-house and, as such, that you may be developing a screenplay that is similar to the material that I am submitting to you. Furthermore, I am also aware that a third party may submit a screenplay to you that is comparable to mine, which you may decide to acquire and produce. You may produce said screenplay, without any obligation to me of any kind, a screenplay that though similar to the material was independently created by a third party or you.

[The production company is disclosing the scenarios under which it may produce a screenplay that may resemble yours but which it asserts is independently created by the production company or a third party. You are agreeing that the production company does not have to pay or credit you under these circumstances.]

4. I agree that any portion of the material that may be freely used by the public, because it is not protected under copyright law or is in the public domain, may be utilized by you. The material which you are free to use without any obligation to me shall be referred to as "unprotected material" henceforth. If all or any part of said material is not unprotected material because it is protected under copyright law, then it shall be referred to herein as "protected material."

[Ideas, theories, names, titles, formats, and content in the public domain are not protected by copyright law. The production company wants the right to use this unprotected material without having to credit or pay you. For example, if you adapt, update and give an urban spin to a Jane Austen book, the production company can do the same without paying you because Austen's works are in the public domain. The production company cannot use your exact word for word adaptation, but it take utilize your idea without payment to you if you sign this Submission Release.]

5. If you use or cause to be used any of the protected material, you will pay me industry standard compensation or the fair market value of said material, whichever is greater.

[I have seen many different clauses regarding use of protected material and compensation therefor. Some companies will wait to reach an agreement with you prior to using the protected material—others want free reign to use it at will. Some will agree to pay you fair market value while others agree to industry standards, or what they say they typically pay for similar material. Regardless of the formula, you usually give up your ability to negotiate the purchase price of your protected material via the agreement.]

6. I acknowledge that no fiduciary or confidential relationship now exists or will ever exist between us by reason of this agreement or submission of the material to you. No express or implied agreements will be exist between us as a consequence of this unsolicited submission or conversations in reference thereto.

[This eliminates the possibility that you may be paid for use of the unprotected material in your screenplay. If you will remember, I discuss in the chapter how contract law protects elements of your screenplay that are not protected by copyright law—this clause eliminates that possibility.]

7. This agreement shall be governed by the laws of the state of California applicable to agreements executed and to be fully performed therein.

[This means that California state law will apply to this agreement regardless of where you reside.]

8. In the event of any dispute concerning the material or concerning any claim of any kind or nature whatsoever, arising in connection with the material or arising in connection with this agreement, such dispute will be submitted to arbitration. We hereby waive any and all rights and benefits, which we may otherwise have or be entitled to under the laws of California to litigate any such dispute in court, it being the intention of the parties to arbitrate, according to the provisions hereof, all such disputes. Either party may commence arbitration proceedings by giving the other party written notice thereof by registered mail and proceeding thereafter in accordance with the rules and procedures of the American Arbitration Association. The arbitration shall be conducted in the County of Los Angeles, State of California and shall be governed by and subject to the laws of the State of California and the then prevailing rules of the American Arbitration Association. The arbitrators' award shall be final and binding and a judgment upon the award may be enforced by any court of competent jurisdiction.

[An arbitration is a proceeding that takes place outside of a court room. There is no judge or jury—just an arbitrator. Furthermore, the prevailing party usually recuperates reasonable legal fees and expenses associated with the arbitration proceeding. Arbitration clauses are touted by the production entities as more financially efficient and less time consuming than litigation. After discussing the issue of arbitration clauses with various transactional and litigation attorneys and witnessing my own clients' arbitrations, I have come to the conclusion that I prefer for my clients to litigate than arbitrate: arbitration is not necessarily less costly than litigation, it is most definitely not less time consuming, can result in an unprecedented decisions, and may result in an outcome that is biased in favor of a motion picture studio or television network. I make an effort to negotiate out of the arbitration clause whenever possible.]

9. I hereby state that I have read and understand this agreement and that no oral representations of any kind have been made to me and that this agreement states our entire understanding with reference to the subject matter hereof. Any modification or waiver of any of the provisions of this agreement must be in writing and signed by both of us.

[This clause eliminates the possibility of an oral agreement that contradicts the terms of the Submission Release. Modifications after-the-fact need to be agreed to in writing by the production company and you.]

Sincerely,

_____ Date: _____

(Writer's Signature)

[The Submission Release is a contract of adhesion, which means that the agreement is presented to you on a take or leave it basis. They will not modify the Submission Release if you object to any of its content, and they will not accept your material without it if you lack an agent or manager and the production company does not accept attorney submissions.

I have presented the most basic of Submission Releases. Every company has their own basic form. It is a good idea to have an attorney explain a Submission Release to you at least once, so that you may know up front how signing it may negatively impact you.

Selling Your Screenplay: The Option/Purchase Agreement

The Option

Any producer who is serious about producing a picture based on your screenplay will offer to Option it. The "Option/Purchase Agreement," in this instance, is a written agreement whereby a producer acquires the exclusive right to develop, produce and distribute a picture based on your screenplay. The Option automatically expires at the end of each option term unless the producer renews it (if it has any remaining terms), or the producer exercises it and purchases the screenplay. The producer will not buy your screenplay until the commencement of principal photography.

Typically, producers want a minimum one year option term with a one year extension. This is not excessive considering that it takes an average of seven years to get a picture produced. You need to give the producer a realistic amount of time to develop the screenplay with you, to attach talent and a director, and to shop it for financing. In fact, do not be surprised if the producer wants an extension at the end of the second option term. I advise my clients to extend if the producer is paying a decent option fee, or has made good use of the time, e.g., talent or a director capable of attracting funding are attached.

The option fee that the producer offers to pay you is influenced by a number of factors: your track record, the producer's track record, the heat generated by your screenplay (if any), the subject's notoriety if the screenplay is based on a true life story, whether you are a WGA member, the screenplay's purchase price, the option term, and whether the producer is a studio or independent producer. Due to the foregoing, I disagree with the notion that the industry standard option fee is 10% of the purchase price. I always try to negotiate the highest option fee possible; in my experience, they generally tend to be under 10% for unproduced writers unless the purchase price is less than WGA low budget minimum. They are in the10% range for writers with a successful track record.

Whether a writer is a WGA member will influence the option fee because the WGA requires that its members be paid an option fee equal to no less than 10% of the applicable WGA minimum purchase price (for a term not to exceed 18 months). From May 2016 through May 2017, the WGA minimums for a low budget and high budget completed screenplay are $48,695 and $98,455 respectively. The option fee required for a purchase price of $250,000 is only $9,845. The producer can offer a higher option fee, but he/she is not required to do so by the WGA. If the producer does so, it will likely be because the writer's track record warrants it or the screenplay has generated a bidding war.

When considering option fees, you have to take into account the fact that most independent producers lack development funds. As such, be flexible and consider the entirety of the circumstances, e.g., the producer's track record, connections, and ability to raise financing. I do recommend that you consider an earnest and reasonable offer. I consider a reasonable offer to be one that takes into consideration the benefit the producer gets by having your screenplay available to develop and produce and the legal fees you will incur to enter into the Option/Purchase Agreement. I appreciate the time, effort and money that the producer is going to invest in getting your screenplay made; I also believe you should not be out-of-pocket on the legal fees.

Options fees are technically advances against the purchase price, but whether they are applied against the purchase price is up to negotiation. Most often, the end result is that the first option fee is applicable against the purchase price and the subsequent ones are not.

I advise you against entering into "free" Options. Free Options usually result in a waste of time, money and opportunity, since you are out-of-pocket on legal fees, cannot shop the screenplay while it is under Option, and producers tend to be less productive when they have no money at stake. An alternative to the free Option is a "Shopping Agreement" wherein you allow the producer to shop the screenplay without acquiring the right to purchase it from you. This arrangement usually works well when you are dealing with a proven producer, who has studio or production company connections, and who could potentially enter into an Option/Purchase Agreement directly with you and pay you an option fee. Shopping Agreements are usually in the 60-90 day range and get extended if you are in the midst of negotiations with a studio/network or production company interested in entering into an Option/Purchase Agreement with you. The producer does not negotiate the terms of the Option/Purchase Agreement on your behalf. He/she only gets the ball rolling so that your agent and attorney can step in and negotiate for you. Keep in mind that if the producer is not successful, that you will not be able to shop your screenplay where he/she shopped it for at least a year—or until there are new executives working there. Other producers may not be interested in paying you for an Option if the previous producer has limited his/her opportunities for success, so this is something to keep in mind.

Purchase Price

There is no such thing as a "standard" purchase price for a screenplay. WGA members cannot accept less than the sum prescribed in the WGA Schedule of Minimums, but can exceed the minimum, and non-WGA members can sell their screenplays for any price they are able to negotiate. Sale prices typically range between 1% and 3% of the cash production budget of the picture. How much you are offered for your screenplay depends on who you are and what you bring to the table. Producers consider your track record; whether there is a bidding war for your screenplay; whether the screenplay is based on a best-selling novel; whether it is about a salacious, interesting or well publicized person or event; the screenplay's genre; and, if known ahead of time, the picture's potential production budget. If the production budget is not known going into the negotiations, I suggest a purchase price based on a sliding scale, e.g., "for a picture not to exceed $15,000,000 dollars, the purchase price shall be 2 ½% of the cash budget of the picture, but in no event less than WGA low budget minimum and no more than $250,000. The purchase price will be increased by $10,000 for every $1 million increase in the picture's production above $15,000,000 not to exceed a total purchase price equal to $500,000." The attorney attempts to secure the highest ceiling possible while the producer tries to limit it.

Additional Compensation

If the purchase price is on the lower end due to limited financing, I ask for additional compensation in the form of a deferment. "Deferred compensation" is a sum of money that is paid at a future date, from first revenues on a pari passu basis with the other parties being paid on a deferred basis. "Pari passu" means dollar for dollar. For example, if you and four cast members are entitled to deferred monies, where you are due $100,000 and each cast member $25,000, and the production company receives $100,000 in revenues, then you each receive $20,000 from the $100,000. Monies received by the production company will be distributed this way until each deferral is satisfied. Deferred compensation is usually paid prior to investor recoupment, since it is considered part of the screenplay's purchase price and is a production cost.

Whenever possible, I negotiate for my clients to receive a "Box Office Bonus," which is not guaranteed and only gets paid when, and if, the picture reaches a specific and pre-determined sales goal. Box Office Bonus compensation may be expressed as follows: "Writer shall be entitled to a Box Office Bonus of $50,000 when, and if, the picture's domestic and international gross box office, as reported in Variety, exceeds three times the picture's production budget." The bonus is only paid if you are a credited writer. I also negotiate for Nomination/Award Bonus that is paid for award nominations and wins, e.g., Golden Globes and Academy Awards.

Sequels, Remakes…

It is standard for a producer to pay the writer of an original screenplay additional monies if he/she produces a sequel, remake, or television series based on the writer's original screenplay. These additional monies are passive payments, which means that the writer does not have to render additional writing services in order receive them. As per industry standard, if a sequel based on your original screenplay is produced, you are paid 50% of the original screenplay's purchase price and 50% of the profit participation allocated to you for the original screenplay. The passive payment drops from 50% to 33 ⅓% on behalf of remakes based on your original screenplay. As such, if you were paid a $100,000 purchase price and 5% of picture's net profits for your original screenplay, you will be paid $50,000 plus 2 ½% of picture's net profits for any sequels and $33,333 plus 1 ⅔% of picture's net profits for any remakes produced. For any television series based on your screenplay, you will receive passive payments based on the running time of each episode, on its first airing and a portion thereof up to the sixth rerun. I usually refer to the WGA schedule of minimums to calculate the television payments even if my client is not a WGA member.

I always negotiate for my clients to have the Right of First Refusal to write any subsequent versions of their original screenplay, be it a sequel, remake, prequel, television series, or television motion picture. How much you are paid to write any of the aforementioned may depend on whether you are a WGA member, the success of your original screenplay, whether you were credited on your original screenplay (sometimes requires sole credit), and whether you are a working writer at the time of the subsequent version's negotiation. The terms for these writing services will not be negotiated until your services are required, and whether you are engaged to write is contingent upon the producer and you coming to an agreement for your services, since this is just a "Right of First Refusal." Passive payments are generally offered in lieu of writing fees.

Separated Rights

The WGA may determine that you are entitled to "Separated Rights" if you are a WGA member: these are a bundle of rights that the WGA has determined belong to writers of original screenplays. Dramatic stage and publication rights are both included in Separated Rights, as is the mandatory first rewrite of your original screenplay for WGA minimum; the right to meet with a senior production executive if the producer wants to replace you with another writer; the right to reacquire the screenplay if it has not been produced within five years; and, WGA minimum payment for sequel theatrical motion pictures, television movies, and television series.

As far as the dramatic stage rights are concerned, you will be entitled to a royalty free license to produce the screenplay as a dramatic stage play after the producer's holdback period of two years from the picture's general release or five years from the purchase agreement. A "holdback period" is a period of time during which the producer has exclusivity to exploit the right. If the producer exploits the dramatic stage rights prior to expiration of the holdback period, then you shall be paid 50% of the minimum sum paid to authors under the Minimum Basic Contract of the Dramatist Guild of the Author's League of America, Inc. Regarding publishing, you will be able to publish the script or novelization of the script subject to a holdback period equal to six months from the picture's general release or three years from date of the purchase agreement. The producer has to give you the opportunity to negotiate directly with the publisher to write a novel based on your screenplay, if the producer publishes it during the holdback period. The producer has to pay you WGA minimum if you do not write the novel and it is published.

Remember, the compensation and the rights guaranteed via the WGA Basic Agreement are the bare minimum to which you are entitled as a WGA member. Sometimes industry standards are higher, as is the case for passive payments for sequels and remakes. Your attorney can always negotiate for more rights and compensation than that required by the WGA.

Profit Participation

"Net Profits," an additional form of remuneration, are paid when, and if, the Picture based on your screenplay reaches a profit position. Net profits are usually calculated by subtracting all of the costs incurred in the making, marketing and distributing the Picture; this calculation includes the production budget, all financing costs, legal fees, bank interest, production company overhead, collection costs, prints, ads, distribution fees, residuals paid to any union, etc. I negotiate for my clients to have net profits allocated, knowing that it is unlikely that they will ever receive them due to the industry's accounting practices and distribution expenses. In other words, it would be nice if you received net profits—just do not count on it.

It is standard to allocate writers 5% of the picture's net profits, though independent producers tend to offer 5% of producer's net profits instead. It is important for you to understand the difference between the two calculations: "Picture's net profits" refers to 100% of the net profits of the picture whereas "producer's net profits" accounts for only 50% of the net profits. Independent producers prefer the latter formula because they generally only retain 50% of the picture's net profits themselves. Rather than push for 5% of Picture's Net Profits, my clients prefer for me to negotiate a Box Office Bonus instead.

Credit

You are entitled to a "Written by" credit if the screenplay was completely original to you, or "Screenplay by" credit if the screenplay is derived from another work, e.g., a book or play. Your credit should appear in the main credits of the picture, on a single card, in a size and type equal to the size and type of the director's credit. The credit should also appear on screen, in the position prior to the director's credit, and in paid ads whenever the director or producers are credited (excepting paid ads which are award/congratulatory type ads). If you are not the only credited writer, as happens so often, then you will have to share the writing credit on the same card with the other credited writer(s).

The WGA has a credit determination process[12] whereby it decides who gets credited (and how) when there are multiple writers on any one screenplay. The WGA compares the written drafts against the produced draft and then determines who gets the credit and in what order, and who does not. The basic credit determination rule is this: Any writer whose work equals 33% of a non-original screenplay, e.g., an adaptation, or 50% an original screenplay will be credited. Credits are limited to two writers unless the credit determination rules otherwise.

Non-members of the WGA do not get the benefit of the WGA's credit determination process. Notwithstanding, I always negotiate into my client's agreements that the producer will apply the WGA rules to determine my client's credit if he/she is not the only writer who worked on the screenplay. This way the subsequent writer only receives a credit if his/her contribution to the screenplay is substantial. I avoid credit provisions whereby the producer is given sole discretion over all aspects of your credit.

If the writer is not a member of the WGA and is entering into an Option/Purchase Agreement with a producer, who is not a WGA signatory, it is a good idea to include language in the credits clause that states that the writer will be "upgraded" (and become a WGA member) if the production company becomes a WGA signatory, or finances the Picture through a WGA signatory company, such as a studio/network. I suggest this additional terminology because a writer, who is not WGA member, will not get the benefit of a WGA credit determination or the credit he/she agreed to in the Option/Purchase Agreement, if the screenplay is rewritten by a WGA member.

Rewrites

You always want the opportunity to do the first paid rewrite of your screenplays, since whether you are credited or share credit hinges on how much of your writing ends up in the final screenplay. I attempt to secure this right for my client regardless of their WGA membership status. I always ask for the rewrite fee to be no less than WGA minimum—more if the writer has a track record. Sometimes producers attempt to credit the rewrite fee against the purchase price—whether it is will depend on your bargaining power. Either way, the goal is to not only do the first rewrite but all of them. The better you rewrite and collaborate with the producer, the more likely it is that you will be the only credited writer. I had a client who Optioned her screenplay to a major studio, refused to do the rewrite that the development executive wanted, breached her contract with the studio, and gave up the career she could have had. You may not believe in the rewrite the producer wants of you, but you have to do it if you want to stay on board and get that credit.

Occasionally, an independent producer without development funding may ask you to do a free rewrite if you are not a WGA member. Whether or not you should do it is contingent on the circumstances. I would not advise you to undertake writing for free for a producer without a good track record, since you will likely be wasting your time. If you are unproduced or need to get a screenplay produced, and a producer asks you to rewrite for free, then I might advise you to do it if the producer lacks development funding, has a very good track record, has the ability to help you develop a production worthy screenplay, and has the connections and capacity to get your screenplay produced. The caveat here is that you have to own the rewrite.

Warranties & Representations

The Option/Purchase Agreement will include a paragraph whereby you will have to make certain representations and warranties in order to sell the screenplay. You will have to warrant and represent the following: that your screenplay is original; that if any material in the screenplay is not original, that said material came from the public domain; that if any material in the screenplay is not original or in the public domain, that it is included with the permission of the original material's author; that your screenplay does not defame anyone; that it does not infringe on another person's right to privacy, and that you are the screenplay's sole and exclusive proprietor and, hence, have the authority to enter into the Option/Purchase Agreement. You cannot enter into the Option/Purchase Agreement knowing that you will be in breach of this clause the moment you sign it because the repercussions are great: you are going to be liable for whatever damages are caused to the producer via an indemnification and hold harmless clause whereby you have to reimburse the producer for any and all damages and legal fees. You need for there to be a reciprocal indemnity and hold harmless clause from the producer to you for damages incurred by you as a consequence of the production and distribution of the picture.

Rights Sold

The Option/Purchase Agreement will, at the very least, require that you sell exclusively and forever all motion picture rights, all television motion picture, all television series and all television spin-off rights and all allied and ancillary rights for the term of the copyright and all renewals and extensions thereof. The allied and ancillary rights include the right to create and sell the picture's soundtrack, merchandise, video games, etc.

In the end, what rights you get to reserve for yourself will depend on your bargaining position and the buyer. For example, studios/networks want to acquire any and all rights in and to your screenplay, whether now in existence or yet to be invented, because in addition to creating filmed entertainment, they may want the right to sell books, create theme parks or theme park rides, stage plays, etc. I try to reserve dramatic, publishing and radio rights. It is next to impossible to reserve them if you are an unproduced writer entering into an Option/Purchase Agreement with a studio/network and more likely with an independent producer. Notwithstanding, you may be entitled to Separated Rights as a WGA member.

Option Reversion

The Option on your screenplay expires if the producer does not renew or exercise the Option prior to its termination date. All rights in and to the screenplay automatically revert to you when the Option expires. You retain any and all option and writing fees paid to you by the producer without the obligation of repayment.

Turnaround Right

You will have a "turnaround right" that provides you with the opportunity to buy back your screenplay if the producer purchased the screenplay, but did not produce it within the time specified in the Option/Purchase Agreement—usually five years. You will have an 18 to 24 month window to reacquire the screenplay. You, or whoever is buying your screenplay, will have to reimburse the producer's direct out-of-pocket cost to purchase and develop the screenplay.

Works-For-Hire: Getting Paid to Write

Most working writers in the film industry work on a for hire basis. A "work-for-hire", as it is known, means that the writer is specifically hired and paid to write on behalf of someone who employs his/her services. In the film industry, this usually occurs when a producer hires you to write a treatment, outline, or screenplay either based on the producer's idea, your screenplay pitch, or assigned material, such as a book, news story, or life story. I strongly recommend that you engage an attorney to negotiate and review the producer's draft of the Work-for-Hire Agreement.

Copyright in the Work-For-Hire

Although copyright normally vests in the author of an original work, copyright to your work vests in the producer if the producer and you entered into a written Work-for-Hire Agreement prior to the commencement of services. The Work-for-Hire Agreement will, among other things, clearly state that you are working on a for-hire basis and, therefore, that all results and proceeds of your labor and the copyright to your work are the property of the producer. It is imperative that the producer and you enter into the Work-for-Hire Agreement beforehand so that the copyright vests in the producer versus you. Otherwise, you will have to assign the results and proceeds of your labor and the copyright to the producer.

Compensation

Any producer who asks you to write for "free" is not treating you with respect and, is likely, a producer without the power and ability to get the screenplay he/she expects you to write produced. You have to value yourself and your talent if you expect anyone else to do the same. Whether I advise my client to write depends on the reasonableness of the compensation and terms offered by the producer.

Work-for-Hire Agreements are done on a "flat deal" or "step deal" basis. "Flat deal" means that the producer is going to pay you a lump sum to write the treatment, outline, first draft, second draft, final draft, polish, etc. It is important that the flat deal be well defined in the agreement, so that you know exactly how many steps you need to write for that flat deal payment. Otherwise, you could end up writing an infinite number of steps until the producer is satisfied, if ever. Payments pursuant to the Work-for-Hire Agreement occur at commencement and delivery of each step, e.g., treatment/outline, first draft, second draft, and final draft. A "step deal" means that the producer is hiring you on a step-by-step basis, so that he/she has the discretion to order the next step in the writing process, or not, and only paying for the steps ordered.

The compensation the producer offers you will take into account your track record, whether you are a member of the WGA, and whether the producer has a development deal or financing. "Development deal" refers to an arrangement between a studio/network and producer whereby the studio/network funds the producer's overhead and development expenses. It is unlikely that the producer will offer you WGA minimum compensation if you are not a WGA member, and not much beyond it if you are, but do not have track record that warrants more.

Additional Compensation

I ask the producer for deferred compensation if you are being offered a less than competitive flat deal or step deal. In addition, I negotiate for a Set Up Bonus, Box Office Bonus and a Nomination/Award Bonus. A "Set Up Bonus" gets paid when, and if, the producer sets up the screenplay at a studio/network.

Profit Participation

The producer should agree to allocate you a portion of net profits as part of your overall compensation, which as per industry standard is five percent (5%) of the net profits of the picture or producer's net profits. If I have to choose between net profits and actual money, I always chose the latter. Whether you are paid net profits, even assuming the picture is profitable, is going to depend on whether you are a credited writer (more on credits below). Your five percent (5%) will get cut in half if you share the credit. Uncredited writers get zero net profits unless the Work-for-Hire Agreement specifically states otherwise.

Credit

Your credit is not eliminated because the copyright is vesting in the producer. You are the screenplay's writer irrespective of copyright law because you wrote it. How, when, and if you are credited is more a function of the WGA or the Work-for-Hire Agreement. There is nothing you can do about your credit if the producer is a WGA signatory, you are WGA member, and you are not the screenplay's only writer due to the WGA's credit determination process. Your credit is completely up to the terms of the Work-For-Hire Agreement if you are not a WGA writer and the producer is not a WGA signatory. Notwithstanding, I try to make the producer follow the WGA's rules for credit determination, so that you are treated fairly should another writer be engaged after you.

Sequels, Remakes…

You may be entitled to passive payments if you are not a WGA member and your attorney was successful in negotiating for them. Whether you need to be the sole writer in order to get paid passive payments will be a function of the Work-for-Hire Agreement. The WGA will determine whether you are entitled to Separated Rights if you are WGA member; this is possible even though you worked on assigned material if your screenplay is substantially different from what was assigned to you, or the assigned material was not available to you, i.e., you adapt a book without referring to it.

Right of First Refusal

You may have the ability to write subsequent versions of the screenplay, e.g., sequel, remakes, television series, if you are granted the Right of First Refusal in your Work-for-Hire Agreement and are a credited writer. I find that it is always worth asking for this right, since you should benefit if your work resulted in a screenplay with a life beyond the original. As I previously mentioned, how much you are paid to write any of the aforementioned will depend on whether you are a WGA member, the success of the screenplay, and whether you are a working writer. Whether you get to write the subsequent version will depend on whether the producer and you are able to reach an agreement for your engagement to do so.

Warranties and Representations

As with the Option/Purchase Agreement, you will have to warrant and represent that whatever you write is original to you with the exception of any material assigned to you. You will have to indemnify and hold harmless the producer should you breach this warranty and representation. You need for there to be a reciprocal indemnity and hold harmless clause for any of the assigned materials provided by the producer and producer's production and distribution of the picture, since you do not want to be legally and financially liable for the producer's actions.

Becoming a WGA Member

Joining the WGA requires that you earn 24 units in the three years preceding the application and payment of a $2,500 initiation fee. You accumulate units by writing for, selling, or by entering into an Option/Purchase Agreement on behalf your screenplay with a WGA signatory producer. Below is the WGA Schedule of Units that applies to screenplays:

- 8 units for a short subject theatrical screenplay.
- 12 units for story for a feature-length theatrical screenplay.
- 24 units for a feature-length theatrical screenplay.

A rewrite will earn you half of the units applicable to the category, e.g., you get four units for rewriting a short subject theatrical screenplay.

A polish will earn you one-quarter of the units applicable to the category, e.g., you get two units for polishing a short subject theatrical screenplay.

An Option will earn one-half of the units you would be entitled to on the purchase up to a maximum of eight units per year, e.g., you are allocated four units if you Option a short subject theatrical screenplay. You are only entitled to units for the initial option period. You receive no units for extensions and renewals.

You can refer to WGA's website for the Schedule of Units available for television, radio, and New Media.[13]

Hiring an Attorney

I have discussed above the reasons why and when you may need to retain an attorney. Now the issue is, how do you find the attorney that is right for you? I suggest you do a little research: ask friends and colleagues for referrals, read legal articles and books written by attorneys, and refer to the posts by attorneys you have read and liked on Linkedin.com or another social forum. Narrow your list down to five attorneys and then interview them. Most attorneys offer a free half hour initial consultation, which is for both your benefit and the attorney's. Take advantage of it. I use the consultation to get to know the potential client, his/her needs and expectations, the likelihood that I can be of service, and to determine if our personalities are compatible. My advice to you is that you retain an attorney that you feel comfortable asking questions, who respects you, who tells you the truth—even if you do not want to hear it—and who you feel is going to be a good advocate for you. If you want an attorney for the long term, which I recommend, steer clear of attorneys that intimidate you or are arrogant. Use the free consultation to shop for an attorney—not for the purpose of picking the attorney's brain when you have no intention of retaining legal counsel.

Attorneys most often get paid an hourly fee, a flat fee, or a percent of the gross monies earned by you. Hourly rates run the gamut. How much you pay by the hour is going to depend on the attorney's experience and whether the attorney is with a large law firm. The average hourly rate is in the $300-$500 range. When billing on an hourly basis, the attorney charges for all the time spent on your behalf: negotiating, drafting, redlining (revising agreements presented to you), phone calls on your behalf or with you, copies, messenger, etc. You might be able to convince an attorney to represent you on a flat fee basis if your financial resources are limited. A flat fee entails the attorney quoting you a price that is inclusive of all the phone calls and work to be done by the attorney on your behalf. The attorney gets no more than the flat fee quoted regardless of how long it takes to conclude the task. Flat fees are on a task by task basis. Either way, you are going to have to provide an up-front deposit based on the attorney's guesstimate or flat fee quote. Whether an attorney will represent you on a percentage basis will depend on whether you are currently making money writing, are represented by a reputable agency or manager, have a track record, or have an offer on the table that will result in a payment to you large enough to compensate the attorney. It is unlikely that an attorney will represent you on a percentage basis otherwise. The average percent is 5%, but it can be as high as 10% if the attorney is representing you on a very low paying matter. Sometimes an attorney will structure a hybrid billing arrangement so that you are paying a portion of your fee up front and the other portion as a percent of the monies earned by you. Attorneys do this sometimes to accommodate a client's limited financial resources.

You will have to sign an engagement agreement with the attorney, which explains the basis of the representation, the fees, deposits (if any), and contains any necessary disclosures. The California State Bar requires one whenever the matter is going to result in payment to the attorney exceeding $1,000 and in contingent fee arrangements. The deposit that you give the attorney will go into an Attorney/Client Trust Account until it is earned by the attorney. Any monies remaining at the end of representation, if any, are returned to you. If you do not understand the engagement agreement have the attorney explain it to you, or consult with another attorney about it.

Is the cost of hiring an attorney worth it if you have an agent or manager? Absolutely, yes! The attorney is an important part of your team who is responsible for not only improving the deal terms but, also, making sure you are protected. I have yet to work on a negotiation with an agent or manager where I did not substantially improve the overall deal. Among other things, I have secured deferrals and bonuses for my clients that were not offered up front and improved my client's credit and the likelihood that he/she would retain it. I always say, "When you think you cannot afford attorney is exactly when you cannot afford to go without one."

Conclusion

As I hope you have realized by reading this chapter, writing is not just about sitting down and creating, it is also about working smart to avoid the types of situations that might detour your writing career. When in doubt, consult with an attorney. Do not rely on advice from "friends," or attorneys who are not familiar with entertainment and intellectual property law. Do not use boilerplates or attempt to draft your own agreements. It is better that you consult and determine that you are in the clear, than discover that you have made a very costly mistake.

This chapter is not a complete review of the subject matter. You should consult with an attorney if you have questions, need additional information, or require legal representation.
