Notes from the Crew

Over the years music and space have shared the same stage many times. The most notable being the NASA broadcast of the Beatles song “Across the Universe”. On Feb. 4th 2008 NASA beamed the song into space over their Deep Space Network to commemorated the 40th anniversary of the day The Beatles recorded the song, as well as the 50th anniversary of NASA's founding. The transmission was aimed at the North Star, Polaris, which is located 431 light years away from Earth. Expressing his excitement, former Beatle, Paul McCartney sent a message to NASA saying, "Amazing! Well done, NASA! Send my love to the aliens. All the best, Paul."

More recently to celebrate the 50th anniversary of Yuri Gagarin's historic launch into space, NASA had Jethro Tull frontman, Ian Anderson, teamed up with astronaut Cady Coleman for the "first space-Earth flute duet." They played part of “Bourree”, which Anderson and his band played on tour way back in 1969 when the Apollo 11 astronauts were on their moon mission.

Other music space “duets” include Gustav Holst's “The Planet Suite Op. 32”. Our personal favorite is Mars but Jupiter is also great. NASA also commissioned the musical work “Sun Rings” based on the sounds of space. Composed by Terry Riley and performed by the Kronos Quartet, “Sun Rings” includes sounds collected over 40 years of research and looped to make a rhythm. David Bowie's “Space Oddity” is the best example of space rock getting mainstream recognition. The BBC featured the song in its television coverage of the Apollo 11 launch and lunar landing.

Music and space are not done with their cosmic duet nor will they be. As long as man ventures into to space they will have the need to remember home. And what better way to remember home than music.

Featured Product

Vocalist Live 3

Want to really connect with an audience and capture their attention? Let the Vocalist® Live 3 triple your voice with warm, natural-sounding harmonies. The Live 3 automatically follows your vocals and chord progression using patented musIQ® technology so you don't have to program a song's key or key changes. Just step on the footswitch while you're playing to fill the room with pitch-perfect backup vocals. You can even have the harmonies sound male or female, and increase their human factor for an organic, realistic sound.

The Live 3 also keeps your song right on target with built-in pitch correction and a variety of useful and intuitive effects like warmth, compression, a noise gate and a two-band EQ. Add in reverb, delay, and a built-in tuner, and you've got an indispensable tool that will have you turning heads and inspiring applause like never before.
